PREFACE.

KIDWELLY deserves a written history of its own.

A Tragedy, in five acts, entitled, 'Gwenllian, or The Siege of Kidwelly,' by E. Andrews, published in 1841; a few facts embodied in an 'Appeal' on behalf of the restoration of the parish church, by Hugh Williams, published in 1847; a Paper prepared by George T. Clark for the Cambrian Archæological Association in 1850, entitled, 'A Description and History of Kidwelly Castle,' published in 'Archæologia Cambrensis,' and twice reprinted in pamphlet form; and some spasmodic and disjointed notices, mostly unauthentic, published in local newspapers, constitute the literature which appears to have been hitherto printed relative to the history of the ancient town and commote of Kidwelly, whose stirring annals extend back to the dim vista of the ages.

The historical interest that clusters round the subject, and the perfunctory treatment it has hitherto received, must be my apology for presuming to present the facts which appear in the following pages, trusting, at the same time, that they may be of interest to my readers, and that my effort, however imperfect, may serve as a chronicle of achievements and events which should not be consigned to oblivion.

I gratefully acknowledge my indebtedness to Archdeacon W. L. Bevan for several valuable suggestions which he has kindly given me.

ITS TOPOGRAPHICAL SITUATION.

KIDWELLY is a town, a municipal borough, and a parish in the hundred and lordship of Kidwelly, and county of Carmarthen. The town itself is situate on the northern and southern banks of the lower course of Gwendraeth Fach (Lesser Gwendraeth) river, and nine miles to the south of Carmarthen. Leland, in his Itinerary, gives it this quaint description—‘ Ther is a litle Toune, now but newly made, between Vendraith Vaure and Guendraeth Vehan rivers, but hard upon Vendraith Vehan. Vendraith Vaur is half a mile of. Ther is betwixt new Kidwelly and the old, but a Bridge over Litle Wendraith. The old Toun is pretily waulldid, and hath hard by the waul, a Castel ; the old Toun is near al desolated, but the Castel is meately wel kept up. It longgid to the Duke of Lancastre. . . . The Castel is very fair, and double waulldid. I saw there iii gates, and over one of them was the Ruine of a Fair Toune Haul, and under, a Prison. A peace of the new Toun was lateli burnid. The new Toune is three times as bigge as the old.’

This description has reference to the condition of the town at about the middle of the 16th century, when Leland wrote, and although it is a sad picture of decadence, it nevertheless proves that Kidwelly had been a place of considerable size and importance at an earlier period.

The little town alluded to was that which grew up under the shadow and protection of the Norman Castle, and was on the left bank of Gwendraeth Fach river. This seems to have been originally built for the accommodation of foreign settlers, consisting of French, English, and Flemings, introduced in consequence of the Norman occupation of the district (see Appendix A). On the other hand, the old town represented as having fallen into decay, was on the right bank of the river, and was probably the capital of the commote of Kidwelly, which, together with the commotes of Gwyr (Gower) and Carnwyllion, formed, at one time, what was known to the Kymry as Cantref Eginog, a constituent part of the third division of the ancient kingdom or principality of Dynevor, or Deheubarth (South Wales).*

* 'Description of Cambria,' by Sir John Price, xix.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF THE NAME.

NENNIUS, a monk of Bangor in North Wales, who is supposed to have written his 'Eulogium Britanniae' in the 9th century, cites the name as Cetgueli.* This form of the name appears also in 'Liber Landavensis' (p. 552), a compilation in the main of the former part of the 12th century. In ancient documents, such as the Patent Rolls, Charter Rolls, Close Rolls, and Inquisitions Post Mortem, the name is variously written, the variations being less instructive than grotesque. The distortions are, indeed, in some instances almost unrecognisable. These are examples—Kedewelli, Cadewely, Kadewely, Keddewelly, Kaddwelye, Kedwelli, Kydewelly, Keldwelby, Kedewelby, Kedewalli, Kydewely, Kedewely, Kedewelle, Kidewell.

Leland's etymology of Kidwelly may reasonably be rebelled against as being atrocious when he says, as he does in his Itinerary, that 'this place was called Cathwelli, that is Cattilectus, because Cattas once used there to make his bed in an oak.'

In 'The Description of Pembrokeshire,' by George Owen, of Henllys, edited by Dr. Henry Owen, the editor states (p. 200) that Kidwelly was in Welsh called Cedweli, or Cadweli, and that the name is a tribal one ordinarily formed from the personal name Cadwal. This authority maintains that the town of Kidwelly borrowed its name from the castle, in whose surroundings it sprang up and that the castle took its name from the district in which it was erected. Similar instances are given in which old Welsh district-names became attached to a town in the vicinity, such as Arwystli, which is derived from Arwystl ; Builth from Buellt, or Buallt ; Cardigan from Ceredigion ; Pembroke from Penbrog ; Brecknock from Brycheiniog ; Maesyfed from Maeshyfaidd ; and Laugharne from Talacharn. The objections to this theory are (1) that Cadwal is left unidentified, and seems to be unknown to history ; (2) that the last syllable in the word Cydweli is unaccounted for.

The popular theory as to the etymology of the name Kidwelly is based on the import of the modern Welsh form Cydweli, which is represented to be a compound word consisting of the prefix cyd (con) wy=gwy (water), and li=lî (a stream). The meaning of the name according to this theory would therefore be, the confluence of streams. And this derivation is supported by the physical features of the locality, as the larger portion of the town, which is called 'the new town,' lies between the greater and lesser Gwendraeth rivers, which mingle their waters in an estuary about a mile from the town.

Plausible though this theory may be, it does not sufficiently account for the earliest form of the name Cetgueli, as given by Nennius.

It will have been observed that the name of both the local rivers is Gwendraeth (White-beach). This does not sound like a river name : it seems to refer to the traeth, or sandy level, across which the united rivers find their way to the sea, and which probably has been transferred from the plain to the rivers themselves, whose union forms the characteristic feature of the locality. If this be so, it is reasonable to suppose that the rivers had, at an early period, a name of their own, and this name possibly supplies an explanation of the two syllables welly, for the original form, as written by Nennius, Cetgueli, would be gueli, and this approximates closely to the well-known Gwili, of Abergwili. The first syllable cet, or as now kid, may be a form of cyd, signifying junction, in which case Kidwelly would refer to that which is the special feature of the neighbourhood—the junction of the Gwelis.

In his explanatory notes on the 'Siege of Kidwelly,' by E. Andrews, the author states (p. 54) that the Gwendraeth originally bore the name of Gwely. The early inhabitants of these parts seem to have been animated by a conservative spirit in naming the rivers, for the names afford little variation, and in some instances no variation at all, as, for instance, Teify, Towy, Tawy, and Taf. So, again, Cleddau is, as in the case of the Kidwelly rivers, shared by two streams, whose junction gave its Welsh name Aberdaugleddau to Milford.

It may, however, be objected that in the last-mentioned theory the 'g' has been dropped out of Nennius's gueli, such not being demanded by the rule of initial mutation, inasmuch as cyd does not affect the radical form; but the loss may have occurred from the practice of by-gone days. If therefore allowance be made for changes produced by time and usage, it is quite possible that the name Kidwelly means the junction of the Gwelis as appropriate to the commote in the first instance, and subsequently to its capital.

ITS ANCIENT HISTORY.

THE remotest antiquity of Kidwelly is suggested by some place-names which have been handed down through the ages to the present time. Among these are Y Maenllwyd Mawr (the great hoary stone) and Allt Cunedda (the hill of Cunedda). These names are so distinctive of two different epochs in the annals of ancient Britain as to justify the assumption that Kidwelly played a prominent part in each of them.

Y Maenllwyd Mawr is the name by which is still generally known a large enclosure on an eminence about half a mile from the town on the old road leading eastward. Here there is what appears to be a Celtic barrow, or tumulus, intact, and of extraordinary size—135 yards long, 6 yards wide, and 4 or 5 feet high—which has remained scientifically unexplored to the present time. This may originally have been a place of Goidelic interment, in which case it is not improbable that it became also a Druidic oratory, for the tomb then not unfrequently became the shrine; but this double use of the position may also have been continued by the Brythons after they had embraced the Christian religion. Indeed, many of our Christian Churches have originated in this manner, and it is a most obvious transition from the tomb to the temple. The worship of the spirits of the dead at the one time would naturally grow into the worship of the Great Unknown in the other.* It is probable that this transition took place here, for the very position became the site (as will be seen later on) of a Christian Church. The swampy condition of the lowlands at the remote period of the Celtic settlement in this island would naturally incline the settlers to select hillocks and mountainous districts for their abode. For this reason they are said to have assembled in the western parts of Britain, where the undulating nature of the country would appeal to them as most suited for their habitation and the rites of their religion. Relics of the Druidic worship and burial might therefore be expected to be found in elevated places, such as the position which Y Maenllwyd Mawr occupies. Druidism itself, in fact, was generally known as Y Maen (the stone).* There remains however, as might have been expected in a site under cultivation, no trace of the hoary stone, probably a megalithic monument commonly called a Cromlech, after which the enclosure is named.

Allt Cunedda is the name given to the hill on the north-east of the town, which is supposed once to have been the site of a stronghold erected either by the chieftain himself, whose name it bears, or by his sons, of whom Meirion and Ceredig, the grandfather of St. David, the Patron Saint of Wales, are the most familiar. It may be observed that in the Ordnance Map of 1842 the position in question is marked 'Ancient Fortress,' and excavations rendered expedient by agricultural processes bear indubitable testimony to the probability of the existence at one time of a somewhat extensive fortification in this place. Now Cunedda, or Cuneddag, a prince of Strathclyde, and his sons are said by Nennius to have come into Wales from a district on the southern side of the Frith of Forth,* which the Picts eventually snatched from the Roman power, and which they made one of their most important settlements.† Nennius also states‡ that Cunedda and his sons arrived in Wales 146 years before the reign of Maelgwn, one of the most astute princes of Cunedda's descendants, who died of the yellow plague A.D. 547. Hence it would appear that their advent followed closely upon the evacuation of Britain by the Roman legions. Cunedda became the Gwledig, or over-king of the Kymry, an office which was a revival and perpetuation of the Dux Britanniarum during the Roman occupation, and he is said to have wielded this power as far as the Severn Sea, a view of the extension of which Allt Cunedda commands.

The general unrest among European nations in the 5th and 6th centuries, which occasioned the withdrawal of the Roman legions from Britain, seems to have disturbed the peace in the south-western part of the island, where the Goidels and Brythons—two branches of the Celtic race—had already settled among the non-Aryan aborigines. The Goidels were probably the first Celtic settlers, and they became in course of time inoculated with the Druidic religion, which had previously belonged to the pre-Celtic inhabitants, while the Brythons were driven hither at a later period, and seem neither to have been welcomed by the Goidels nor to have adopted their religious creed, as they are supposed to have remained polytheists, such as they were, when Julius Caesar ('De Bello Gallico') first made their acquaintance. It would appear that the Brythonic intruders settled in this part in a strip of country which lay on the eastern bank of the river Towy extending southwards to the sea,* and they are said by Nennius to have been countenanced by the northern conquerors, by whom the Goidels were driven out. It is also stated by Camden that this territory was for a long time possessed by the sons of Keianus, the Scot, and that they were expelled by Cunedda.†

At the time when this onslaught was made by Cunedda and his sons on the Goidels, the district was known as Gwyr (Gower) and Y Tri Chwmmwd (the Three Commotes), by which latter were meant Kidwelly, Carnwyllion, and Is-cennen.‡ This grouping formed the Swydd Gydwell, a misprint for Gydweli.§ At another period, however, Kidwelly, Carnwyllion, and Gower seem to have been the three commotes belonging to the cantref of Ystrad Tywy or Eginog.|| Urien, the son of Cynvarch, or Urien Rheged as he is otherwise called, is also associated by Welsh tradition with this, or a similar exploit, for it is asserted that King Arthur sent this prince of the Round Table with ten thousand men to recover the above-mentioned Three Commotes which Gilmore Rechdyr, king of Ireland, had usurped in the time of Constantine the Blessed, the first British sovereign after the Roman evacuation, A.D. 406. Urien is credited with having conquered the Irish and put them to flight, and to have subsequently received the kingdom of the country which was called Rheged—supposed to be derived from anrheg, a gift. This comprised the district between the rivers Tawy and Towy, including Gower, Kidwelly, Carnwyllion, Iscennen, and Cantref Bychan, and is said to have been a free gift bestowed unanimously upon Urien by its ancient British inhabitants.*

Rheged is represented in the Iolo MSS. (p. 457) to have been included in the kingdom of Glamorgan. Subsequent, however, to the time of Hywel Dda, during whose magnificent reign the ancient British subdivisions of Wales underwent a considerable modification, there arose incessant disputes between Morganwg (Glamorgan) and Deheubarth (South Wales), touching the limits of the rival dominions. The district known as Gower and the Three Commotes, including Kidwelly, constituted one of the debatable territories. Towards the latter part of the 10th century 'Liber Landavensis' (p. 502) presents the district between the mouth of the Wye and the mouth of the Towy as comprising the kingdom of Morgan Hên, king of Glamorgan. The Principality of Iestyn ap Gwrgan, who succeeded to the throne of Glamorgan about the middle of the 11th century, is stated in the Iolo MSS. (p. 391) to have embraced the district between Tawy and Towy. In either case Kidwelly would then be included in the kingdom or lordship of Glamorgan.

Down to the year 1133 the diocese of Llandaff seems to have been co-extensive with the kingdom of Morganwg, or with the Principality of Glamorgan, and therefore the district above mentioned would also be within the see of Llandaff. This fact is attested even as late as the year 1130 by the following Bull of Innocent II., addressed to the 'Inhabitants of Gower, Kidwelly, &c.'

'Innocent, Bishop, servant of the servants of God, to his sons, the clergy and people resident throughout the parishes of Gower, Kidwelly, Cantref-Bychan, Ystradyw, and Ergyng, health and apostolical benediction. As our predecessor of happy memory, Pope Honorius, has by his writings ordered you to obey our venerable brother Urban, Bishop of Llandaff, so also we command that you humbly render to him, as to your father and Bishop, obedience and reverence.

'Given at the Palatine the 25th day of Feb., 1130.'

The district in question became also a source of friction which eventually developed into litigation between the rival sees of Llandaff and St. Davids. The dispute, although repeatedly laid before the Pope, was not settled at Rome, nor until the death of Urban, bishop of Llandaff, which occurred when he was on a journey to Rome in the prosecution of the business in 1133. The contest was then given up by the bishop of Llandaff, and Bernard, bishop of St. Davids, retained possession of the district, which has ever since been incorporated in the see of St. Davids.

A local function (the consecration of an ancient cemetery), reference to which is made later on, induces the belief that the district in dispute had virtually exchanged hands as regards diocesan limits between 1096 and 1112.

Rhys ap Tewdwr, who succeeded his father Tewdwr the Great as Prince of South Wales in 1077, had already, for the purpose of civil government, detached the district from Glamorgan, and had it annexed to his own dominion, and this probably was one of the chief causes of the imbroglio that ensued between Glamorgan and Deheubarth, and which resulted in the Norman conquest of Glamorgan and the Norman invasions and occupation of Kidwelly.

INTRODUCTION OF FOREIGN INFLUENCE.

Iestyn, lord of Glamorgan, was at enmity with Prince Rhys (an enmity probably arising out of this disputed territory) at the time when Eineon, son of Cadivor, son of ^{of} Collwyn, lord of Dyfed (Pembrokeshire), who had been implicated in a rebellion against Rhys, the reigning Prince, fled to Glamorgan for refuge. This Eineon had served as an officer in the English Army in foreign wars. In order to insinuate himself into the favour of Iestyn, he volunteered, under certain stipulations (among which was a promise of Iestyn's daughter in marriage, with the lordship of Miskin for her dowry), to make a personal application to the King of England (William Rufus), with whom he professed to be in favour,* for military assistance to Iestyn against Rhys ap Tewdwr. This negotiation resulted in the willing sympathy and active support of Robert Fitzhamon, a kinsman of William the Conqueror and Knight of the Privy Chamber to King William Rufus,* and twelve other Norman knights. These levied in England a formidable army, consisting of twenty-four squires and three thousand men,† which, having joined that of Iestyn in the year 1090, marched together into the territories of the Prince of South Wales. Rhys ap Tewdwr, although then about 98 years of age, hastily raised an army and met the combined invaders near Brecon, where a sanguinary battle ensued with great slaughter on each side. The aged but still valiant prince was slain in the engagement, and history relates that with him disappeared the glory of the Principality of South Wales.‡ The object for which their aid had been requisitioned having been attained, the Norman knights, after being sufficiently indemnified by Iestyn, made preparations for their withdrawal to England. At this juncture, however, Eineon, who had perceived that Iestyn was disinclined to fulfil his engagement to him, hurried to Robert Fitzhamon and his lieutenants, and having reported to them this breach of faith, invited them in his desire for revenge, to return and dispossess Iestyn of his lordship, advancing his unpopularity with his subjects as a plea.§ The mercenaries eagerly seized the opportunity of becoming combatants on their own account. Iestyn, with the demoralised remnant of his army, was attacked on Mynydd Bychan, or Cardiff Heath,* was hopelessly defeated, and had no alternative but to flee the country.

‘ What evils has the want of love produced,
My country can declare ; the want of this—
Oh ! sad the thought ! spoiled Iestyn of his all ;
Fixed the Normans in Morganwg’s land ;
Robb’d Cymry of their much lov’d soil ;

Even in their children’s blood ! ’

Siege of Kidwelly.

Having gained an easy victory, the Normans now proceeded to divide the spoil. The royal lordship of Glamorgan was appropriated by Robert Fitzhamon, and the fertile parts were distributed among his knights, while the perfidious Eineon was left only the worthless soil and hilly districts for his trouble. Of the knights among whom Glamorgan was partitioned was William de Londres, whose family played a prominent part in the history of Kidwelly. His share was the Castle and Manor of Ogmore. Having secured this point of vantage, the Norman knights lost little time in pushing forward their arms to the Principality of South Wales, now enfeebled by the fall of Rhys ap Tewdwr ; for the conquest of Wales, unlike that of England, was effected by private enterprise.

NORMAN INVASIONS.

Hardly indeed had the Normans been settled in Glamorgan before they made a descent, in the year

* Iolo MSS., p. 380.

1093, on Gwyr, Kidwelly, and Ystrad Towy, devastating all the country before them.* Whether William de Londres, lord of Ogmore, took an active part in this particular expedition does not appear, but he is said to have won from the Welsh, at some time, the lordship of Kidwelly and Carnwyllion,† and to have built a castle at Kidwelly.‡ Doubt is, however, cast on these assertions by the late R. W. Banks in his article on Early Charters in South Wales in 'Archæologia Cambrensis' (Series IV., vol. ix., p. 82), where it is contended that Henry I. was in possession of Kidwelly, Gower, and the Vale of Towy when he came to the throne in 1100. But if a fortress was erected at Kidwelly by this knight, its resisting strength could not have been great, as in the year 1094, when the garrison of Rhydygors, which for some time had overawed the Welsh, was scattered, the men of Gwyr (Gower) and these parts were encouraged to make an effort to regain their liberty. The effort proved successful, for the Normans were put to the sword or driven out of the country.§ Consequent on this rising a temporary deviation was made in the method of conquering Wales, for King William Rufus, on his return from Normandy in 1095, conducted a series of expeditions with the royal army, amid much ostentation into the marches of Wales. But, partly because his soldiers were miserably accoutred, and partly because of the strategical methods adopted by the Welsh, the royal army was repeatedly forced to retire without having gained any advantage. The conquest of Wales was again delegated to private enterprise, the chief feature of which was the erection of Norman Castles. By this means Wales became practically colonized by the military, so that each isolated movement of revolt on the part of the Welsh was immediately met by a local force. It will be seen that while the Saxon invasion hardly disturbed the equilibrium of this part of Britain, the history of Kidwelly in the middle ages is bound up with the Norman Conquest and its consequent exactitude and elaboration in the re-adjustment of things, both civil and religious.

About the year 1101, or two years after the death of King William Rufus, Ystrad Tywy, Kidwelly, and Gower were bestowed by Henry I. on Howel ap Gronow.* From this fact it would appear either that William de Londres was merely in possession of the town of Kidwelly and its immediate vicinity, or that he was deprived by his new royal master of more extensive local property which might once have belonged to him. Howel ap Gronow was, however, killed in 1103 by the soldiers of the Norman garrison which had been re-established at Rhydygors Castle.†

Probably at this time the Norman invasion of Gower, Carnwyllion, and Kidwelly, already referred to above, took place. It would appear that the Normans had left a garrison at Kidwelly, and had probably otherwise kept themselves in touch with this district since the invasion of 1093, although conflicting interests in the interval amply show that the inhabitants were still in revolt against Norman domination. Another coup d'état was therefore necessary in order to bring the Three Commotes (Carnwyllion, Kidwelly, and Iscennen) into definite subjection. It will be seen further on that Roger, bishop of Salisbury, Chief Justiciary and Treasurer to Henry I., was associated with this expedition. It is certain that this powerful minister was in possession of considerable property at Kidwelly in the earlier part of the 12th century, and he is made to appear as lord of the Manor of Kidwelly in a document, which, although undated, must have been executed prior to the year 1112, as Wilfrid (or 'Griffri' as he was known to the Welsh), bishop of St. Davids, who died in that year, is therein referred to as having given his consent to the consecration of a local cemetery provided for by the document (see Appendix A.). It is also equally certain that there was a castle in existence at Kidwelly at that time, for the document in question was drawn up at, and issued by Roger, from — 'the house of the Castle of Kedweli.' It is not indeed improbable that the castle which then stood was erected by Roger, bishop of Salisbury, for he became known to history as a great castle builder. He certainly built castles at Devizes, Sherborne, and Malmesbury, which not only excited the jealousy of the barons, but were the admiration of Europe.* This, of course, could not have been the castle, the noble ruins of which still stand, as the style of architecture adopted in its construction was unknown at the beginning of the 12th century. It may therefore safely be assumed that this early castle, if it was built by Roger, was of a substantial character, and may have been the foundation on which the present castle was afterwards reared. Whether William de Londres voluntarily relinquished or was deprived of his interest in Kidwelly at this time, there seems little doubt that Roger was lord of the Manor and actual owner of its property in the first decade of the 12th century. Roger's sojourn at Kidwelly seems to have been brief, for William de Londres was again in possession of the manorial property in the year 1113.

* Hunt's 'Norman Britain,' p. 203.

THE VICISSITUDES OF THE CASTLE.

RYFFITH ap Rhys ap Tewdwr, the rightful prince of South Wales, who, from fear of King Henry I., had been from his infancy brought up in Ireland, made his appearance in Wales in the year 1110. The rumour of his arrival was spread in 1112, and it was at length reported to the king that a son of Rhys ap Tewdwr laid claim to the Principality of South Wales. A price was put on his head by the king, who offered a tempting bribe to Gryffith ap Cynan, prince of North Wales, at whose court Gryffith ap Rhys was staying, for his betrayal. Gryffith ap Cynan was captivated by the king's overtures, and consented to grant his demand. The young Prince of South Wales fled to Aberdarron Church for sanctuary, and when the royal messengers came to apprehend him, the clergy refused to give him up; whereupon he was conveyed by his friends to Ystrad Tywy. Here he declared open defiance to the King of England, and at length raised forces wherewith to attack the Normans and Flemings.* His primary attacks were made on Llandovery Castle, which belonged to Richard de Pwys, and Swansea Castle, which was built by Henry Beaumont, Earl of Warwick, but each proved unsuccessful. On his return from Swansea to Ystrad Tywy, he burned and destroyed all the country before him. He afterwards destroyed the town of Carmarthen and laid siege to its castle, which was not surrendered, although the governor,

* Powell, pp. 142—144.

Owen ap Caradoc, was killed. Gryffith's forces having by this time gained considerable strength, he marched next on Gower, and William de Londres and his soldiers, through whose territory the Welsh warrior had to pass, became so alarmed at his approach that they hastily forsook the Castle of Kidwelly. When Gryffith therefore arrived here, he found the place deserted, and a large number of cattle without owners. He forthwith burnt down the castle, and made off with the booty.* About this time Gryffith ap Rhys was married to Gwenllian, daughter of Gryffith ap Cynan, prince of North Wales.

Maurice de Londres, as legal heir to the property, became lord of the manor of Kidwelly (see page 23), and at the death of Henry I. (1135) he owned a vast amount of property both here and elsewhere, and was, moreover, a powerful personage. He was the founder of Ewenny Priory, and between 1147 and 1176, during the episcopate of David, bishop of St. Davids, 'he gave and granted to God, and Saint Mary of Kedweli, and the monks of Schyrborne twelve acres of land around the Church of St. Cadoc, which adjoin the land of the aforesaid church of St. Mary' (see Appendix C.).

As Gryffith ap Rhys had been a thorn in the side of the head of his family, so was Maurice de Londres destined to be harassed by the same prince; for Giraldus Cambrensis records the fact (I. p. 168) that while Gryffith ap Rhys was absent in North Wales, whither he had gone to seek reinforcements from Gryffith ap Cynan, his father-in-law, in support of his revolt against the Normans in South Wales, his wife Gwenllian put herself at the head of an army, and marched on Kidwelly :

‘ Gwenllian too,
Who lov’d not self, but others ; who ever
Shew’d herself the friend, the parent of her People.’

The Siege of Kidwelly.

‘ In Londres’ tent the clarion sounds,
With rapid clangour hurried far,
Each hill and dale the note rebounds,
And echoes with the shout of war.’

After a hot engagement with Maurice de Londres’s Norman forces, which took up their position on the slope of a hill about a mile and a half north of Kidwelly on the west bank of Gwendraeth Fach river, which to this day is called the King’s Wood, the Welsh, under Gwenllian’s command, were defeated, and Gwenllian herself, together with her son Morgan, was put to death. The battlefield is still called Maes Gwenllian (the field of Gwenllian), and is situate on the eastern bank of Gwendraeth Fach river, opposite King’s Wood.

‘ Gwenllian was,—is not ! A day
Of gloom, of darkness shrouds my mountain-land,
Now that its sun is set !—The life-blood of
The patriot-queen, this field,—that stream received !
Bewidowed of its feathered tribes, that fled
Aghast from villainy so great, that wood
In holy stillness mourns th’ illustrious dead !
Less callous they than man !

Siege of Kidwelly.

The date assigned to this battle by Dr. John Jones in his ‘ History of Wales ’ (p. 321) is 1130. It certainly must have been fought prior to 1136, as Gryffith ap Rhys is said to have died in that year.*

A glimpse is given into the private life of Maurice de Londres by Giraldus Cambrensis (Vol. I. Chap. 9), where it is stated that he had a forest in the neighbourhood of Kidwelly, which was well stocked with animals and especially deer, to which he was partial, being very fond of venison. An episode is related by Giraldus in connection with Maurice's partiality to the deer, and that of his wife to the sheep, which, for its quaintness, is here given in literal translation :—' His [Maurice] wife (for women are often very expert in deceiving men) made use of this curious stratagem. Her husband possessed on the side of the wood next the sea, some extensive pastures and large flocks of sheep. Having made all the shepherds and chief people in her house accomplices and favourers of her design, and taking advantage of the simple courtesy of her husband, she thus addressed him—" It is wonderful that being lord over beasts, you have ceased to exercise dominion over them ; and by not keeping your deer in order, do not now rule over but are subservient to them ; and behold how great an abuse arises from too much patience, for they attack our sheep with such an unheard-of rage, and unusual voracity, that from many they are become few, from being innumerable, only numerous." To make her story more probable she caused some wool to be inserted between the intestines of two stags which had been embowelled ; and her husband thus artfully deceived, sacrificed his deer to the rapacity of his dogs.'

* Powell, p. 158.

After Maurice's death, the lordship of Kidwelly and the ownership of the castle seem to have passed to his brother, Thomas de Londres, and to have been transmitted down in that branch of the family until they were merged in the crown of England at the accession of Henry IV., as shown in the following genealogical table.

THE GENEALOGY OF THE BRANCH OF THE DE LONDRES FAMILY AFFECTING THE LORDSHIP OF KIDWELLY.

The castle is said to have been demolished again by Cadwgan ap Blethyn,* and to have been rebuilt in 1190 by Lord Rhys, son of Gryffith ap Rhys ap Tewdwr by Gwenllian his wife.† Unlike his father, who lived under the ban of the English monarch, Lord Rhys was in favour with King Henry II., and enjoyed the peaceable possession of vast properties in Wales, which included the Dynevor demesne. He was, moreover, powerful by reason of his astuteness. The high esteem in which he was held by his countrymen is manifested in the following Funeral Verses to him, which are chronicled in 'The Remains concerning Ancient Britain' by Camden (p. 400):—

'Nobile Cambrensis cecidit diadema decoris,
 Hoc est, Rhesus obiit; Cambria tota gemit.
 Subtrahitur, sed non moritur, quia semper habetur
 Ipsius egregium nomen in orbe novum.
 Hic tegitur, sed detegitur, quia fama perennis
 Non finit illustrem voce latere ducem:
 Excessit probitate modum, sensu probitatem,
 Eloquio sensum, moribus eloquium.'

'All Cambria mourns her noble Prince's fall; for well
 She knows that with him fell her glory's diadem.
 Departed hence, he smiles beneath his native earth;
 And yet departed never, he whose glorious name
 Shall live for aye, afresh upon the lips of men;
 Beneath the earth, and yet no earth can cover him,
 That noble prince, whom everlasting fame forbids
 To die. The greatness of his soul no one can tell,
 Whom nature with her gifts so bounteously endowed,
 That modesty with uprightness, with excellence

The castle was again destroyed by Lord Rhys's grandson, Rhys ap Gryffith, and it shortly afterwards fell into the hands of the Crown.*

It was granted by Henry VII. to Sir Rhys ap Thomas, and after being forfeited by his grandson, Rhys ap Gryffith, it became the property of Richard Vaughan, Earl of Carberry, and President of Wales,† from whom it has descended to Earl Cawdor, who now owns it, as well as the lordship of the manor of Kidwelly.

THE MANOR.

THE manorial property was managed by a reeve, or receiver, appointed by the lord of the manor. The translated extracts given below throw some light on the nature and extent of the manorial estate.

Kidwelly Fach.—The manor of Kidwelly, as will be seen from the following reference, pushed its possessions to the very gates of Carmarthen, a circumstance which may account for the fact that the district on the right bank of the river Towy at Carmarthen is still known as 'Kidwelly Fach.'

'To Gilbert Talebot, justice of South Wales. Order not to intermeddle further with 50 acres of meadow and 80 acres of marsh in the lordship of Kedewelli, but so that the King shall re-enter the premises if anything be found to establish his right thereto, as lately, at the suit of Henry de Lancast, earl of Derby, showing that Patrick de Chaworth was seised at his death, in his demesne as a fee, of 100 arces of meadow, and 100 acres of marsh in that lordship, as parcel of his manor of Kedewelli near the town of Kermerdyn, and the premises were taken into the hand of Edward I. at Patrick's death by reason of the minority of Matilda, Patrick's daughter and heir; the Earl's mother, whose heir he is, the King's ministers asserting that they were parcel of the King's demesne of Kermerdyn, and the Earl beseeching the King to order them to be restored to him, the King ordered the justice to take an inquisition on the matter, by which it is found that the meadow and marsh near Kaermerdyn are 80 acres of meadow and 80 acres of marsh, and they are in the lordship of Kedewelli as parcel of the manor of Kedewelli, and are not parcel of the lordship of Kaermerdyn, and that Patrick died seised of the said meadow and marsh, in his demesne as of fee, as of parcel of the said manor ; and that the meadow and marsh were taken into the hand of Edward I. as aforesaid, and that they are the right of the Earl, and are held of the king by homage as parcel of the said manor ; and that Matilda was Patrick's next heir, and the Earl has besought the King by his petition before him and his Council in Parliament, to cause his hand to be amoved from the meadow and marsh ; and the writ, inquisition, and petition being exhibited and read in Parliament before the great Council, it is agreed by that Council that the King's hand shall be amoved.'—Close Rolls, 14 *Edw. THE CASTLE.

 IDWELLY justifiably rejoices in the possession of a Norman Castle which in point of gigantic and symmetrical proportions, and present good state of preservation, may be considered as unrivalled in this part of South Wales. It occupies a commanding position on the right bank of the Gwendraeth Fach river, and nearly opposite the parish church and the site of the priory.

The age of the present Castle.—It has been observed that there was a castle in existence at Kidwelly in the early part of the 12th century (see page 17). This must have been of the Norman style of architecture, but as this style cannot be traced in the present building, even the oldest portions of the structure which now stands must have been built in a subsequent period. The inner ward, together with its drum towers, and the west wall of the chapel, are generally supposed to be earlier than the rest of the castle. The hall, which the inner curtain embraces, was, however, a later addition, as the flattened surface of the south-east tower, which was a provision for its gable, indicates. The earliest date assigned to the inner ward is the second decade of the 13th century. Although the unsubstantial character of the entrances to the inner ward suggests that the outer fortification was contemplated in the original design, the mural towers, and the uniting walls of the outer ward were probably of a later date. The great gate-house is of a still later date. Its architecture is that of the early perpendicular, and therefore it could not have been built before the end of the 14th century.

Its general arrangement.—Professor A. E. Freeman, in a paper read by him at Cardiff,* thus describes the castle :—‘ The general outline of Kidwelly Castle is much more than merely grand and striking ; it approaches very nearly to the nature of an architectural composition. Four massive round towers surround the keep ; two others flank the great gate-way ; a design sufficiently regular to be caught and understood by a person not acquainted with castellated technicalities, while the shiftings and different groupings of so many towers produce an endless variety of picturesque effects.’

As may be seen from the plan of the castle, the formation of the building is practically semi-circular, the curve being flanked with a moat, and its chord supplied by nature with a cliff and the Gwendraeth Fach river. A survey of the castle was made by Mr. George T. Clark for the purpose of a paper which he prepared for the Cambrian Archæological Association in 1850.† According to this survey, which principally forms the basis of the description here given, the castle measures 440 by 90 to 130 yards, and stands on about three acres of ground.

The Inner Ward.—The principal entrance to this ward, which has a portcullis groove, is in the south curtain. A quadrangle 80 yards square is formed by the four curtains, together with the drum towers, which form caps to the angles. The north-east and south-east towers are joined to the outer wall which is built on the precipitous edge of a cliff. The latter tower is also attached to the chapel, and has an outlet to the curtain of the outer ward which leads to the great gate-house. Three of the inner curtains are six feet thick and 18 feet high, and they have a rampart walk with parapets pierced at intervals with loops. The eastern curtain is, however, narrow and low, the cliff having evidently been considered to be a good defence on this side. In addition to the reception hall and the chapel, the inner ward contains the kitchen and a spacious refectory. The towers are 30 feet in diameter and 44 feet in height with battlements. Their walls are 9 feet thick, and each has a well-staircase and three lofts with loopholes and doors opening on the ramparts of the curtains. Three of the towers had wooden floors, while the north-west one is vaulted. This latter tower is directly accessible from the kitchen and from the porter's lodge along a rampart on the wall, whence it is called the 'Porter's Prison,' and incisions in the stucco of the chambers of this tower, such as may be seen in the Tower of London and many other places of mediæval confinement, together with the fact that its chambers are vaulted throughout, would suggest that it was used as a prison.

* ‘Arch. Camb.’, New Series, Vol. I., p. 57.

The Hall and the Retiring-room, which were in a line with each other, occupied the whole of the space on the east side of the inner ward. The south end of the hall rested against the south-east tower. The height and pitch of the roof may still be traced. The west wall of the chapel formed a portion of the east side of the hall, and a projection in the east curtain looks as if there had been a small chamber attached to the hall. The west wall of the hall has disappeared. The length of the hall is 60 ft., and the width 25 ft. The retiring-room, which adjoins the hall and north-east tower, is 30 ft. long, and the same width as the hall. Here in the east wall is a loop, and near it the carved remains of the base of a chimney. 1378330

The Kitchen and Refectory are opposite the hall and retiring-room respectively. The kitchen is 30 ft. long by 17 ft. wide. It has a large fire-place at each end, and a window which opens on the outer ward. A third small fire-place may also be seen in the south end. The doorway in the east wall has been made narrower than it was originally, an arrangement which may have been devised to obviate opening a door of unnecessary width in serving hot dishes. The refectory probably occupied the square space, 45 ft., to the north of the kitchen and bounded on two sides by the north and west curtains.

The Chapel.—In the paper already alluded to Professor E. A. Freeman gives this description of the chapel:—

‘The Castle chapel is a triumph of art; a building amply satisfactory, both in an ecclesiastical and architectural point of view, has room found for it in a structure purely military, without in the least interfering with the genuine character of the latter. The chapel forms the upper story of three in a building projecting from the main line of the Castle towards the east, and as this building terminates in a semi-hexagon, an apex is at once provided for the chapel. It is lighted by single trefoil lancets, whose small size and delicate execution at once call attention to this portion of the building as something distinct from the rest, without forcing it on the view in an inharmonious prominence. Just the same is the effect of the admirably selected form and position. And the effect is heightened by the addition of a square projection to the south, whose upper story forms a vaulted chamber, which has clearly been the sacristy. Within, the whole architecture, perfectly plain, yet exquisitely finished, is precisely what that of a military chapel should be.'

It measures 26 ft. long by 18 ft. wide. Its height from the base of the outer projection is 56 ft., and from the inner surface 25 ft. In the north-east corner is a spiral staircase connecting the different floors. The ground floor of the chapel tower is below the surface of the interior of the castle, and is in communication with the adjoining hall by means of a staircase. The second floor was on a level with the hall, with which it also communicates. In the apex on the south side is a piscina, and near it a sedilia. In the south wall a door opens into the sacristy, and to the west of the door is a recess with a stopped loop. In the north wall there are also a door and loop, both of which are blocked.

The age of the Chapel, although a disputed point, may approximately be decided by the style of architecture adopted in its construction. While some authorities claim that the style is early English, and others that it is early Decorated, all seem to agree that it was erected between A.D. 1290 and 1310.

The outer ward contains the two gate-houses which are opposite each other, and are connected by an outer curved curtain in which at intervals there are mural towers 30 ft. high and 22 ft. in diameter. This curtain is 330 ft. long, 6 ft. thick, and 20 ft. high, and has a rampart walk. The great gate-house is a massive pile 80 ft. by 50 ft., and 62 ft. high. The gateway is 11 ft by 8 ft., and the moat at the threshold is 12 ft. deep. On either side of the main entrance is a conical tower 24 ft. in diameter at the base, and 20 ft. at the top, and over the entrance are three flat arches built into the wall to relieve the mass of masonry. The portal is roughly vaulted and has a portcullis groove at each end, as well as three apertures for gratings. The square tower, called Pigin, on the north-west angle of the block, is a later addition. This is 93 ft. high and was probably used as a watch tower. On each side of the portal are dungeons and guard-chambers, the latter having loopholes overlooking the main entrance. Another room on the right has a conical fountain beneath the surface, two recesses, and a sewer room. The first floor of the great gate-house is reached by a staircase from the outer court, over the porter's lodge, as well as by a spiral staircase in the square tower, and has four rooms, to one of which are large windows opening into the outer court. This has also a fire-place, as well as that which adjoins it. The third room was used for working the portcullis, and the fourth is a kitchen with a large oven. Unlike the other rooms on the first floor which had wooden floors, this room is vaulted, and has an outlet to the east rampart leading to the south-east tower. The second floor, also reached by spiral staircases, contains a large room with windows opening into the outer court, and several smaller apartments which, judging from the stuccoed walls and sculptured ornamentation, were used as state bedrooms.

The garrison seems to have been provided for by two detached buildings in the outer ward, one to the west of the inner ward, measuring 65 ft. by 30 ft., and the other to the north of the inner ward, against the east curtain, and near the northern gate-house, measuring 60 ft. by 35 ft.

There is also a bakehouse against the curved curtain to the west of the lesser gate-house, with a large oven intact. Like the mural towers, the lesser or northern gate-house is rudely built, and bears the marks of rough handling.

The Barbican stood on an elevated position immediately opposite the main entrance to the castle, with the moat and drawbridge between. The foundations show that it was a semi-circular construction.

The outer Gate-house still retains its principal features. This also seems to have had its drawbridge and ditch. The illustration of this gate-house is among Grose's collection.

Royal Visitors.—The Castle of Kidwelly has from time to time been graced by visits from reigning monarchs. The first royal visit seems to have been made by King John, to which the following reference is made in the 'History of Margam,' by Dr. Walter de Gray Birch :—

'King John visited Margam Abbey on two occasions in the year 1210, prior and subsequent to his expedition into Ireland. Setting out from Westminster, 8th May, and passing through Odiham, Winchester, Marlborough, and Bristol, the king was at Neath on Friday, 21st May, Cardiff, Tuesday 25th May, Margam and Swansea 28th May, and Haverford on the last day of the month. The return journey was commenced at Dublin, Tuesday, 24th August; the king reached Fishguard Thursday, 26th August; Haverford and Kidwelly on the following day.'

King Edward I. paid a visit to Kidwelly in the year 1285, as will appear from an Inspeximus, 9 Richard II., Feb. 18, 1386—‘Confirmation, in favour of the burgesses of Kardigan, of a charter dated at Kidwelly 9 December, 13 Edward I., being a grant and confirmation to them of the lands and customs hitherto enjoyed by the burgesses of Kermerdyn, and divers liberties.’*

King Richard II. visited the town in the year 1394, whence he issued the Charter of which the following is an abstract—‘Grant for life to Richard Mareys of the office of porter of the Castle of Bristol, at the supplication of the present holder John Dawe.’†

The same king paid a visit to Kidwelly in 1398—9, for in the Minister’s Account of the manor of Kidwelly which appears below, it will be seen that ‘the late king Richard II.’ spent a night in the castle.

‘Duchy of Lancaster—Minister’s Accounts. Bundle 573, No. 9063.—P.R.O. A memorandum dated 3 Feb. 22 Richard II. [1398—9]. John Wilkyns, Reeve, answers for “one pipe of wine remaining in the castle after the departure of the late King Richard, and sold by Walter Castell for 20^s and more, it is said.’

When John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, died, King Richard seized the duchy estates ; then the new Duke (afterwards Henry IV.) came over from abroad, and raised a rebellion in England ; and King Richard, then in Ireland, came hurriedly over to England, landing at Milford Haven. It is probable that this was the occasion when he took a night’s shelter, en route, at the castle.

THE EARLY CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

CUNEDDA Wledig, who was of Cymric race, was, moreover, a Christian, and the ancient British Church which was evolved from its predecessor, the Romano-British Church, owes its establishment, in a large measure, to this worthy chieftain, and his noble family.* St. David, the founder, and first Bishop of the see which bears his name, was the great-grandson, on his father's side, of Cunedda. St. Cadoc, whose genealogy is somewhat enveloped in mystery, is, however, stated to have been the son of Cuneglasos or Cynlas, lord of Glamorgan, who was grandson of Cunedda's son Einion.† St. Teilo is also said to have been a descendant of Ceredig, another son of Cunedda.‡ so that this celebrated saint too belonged to the same illustrious family, being a great nephew of St. David.§ History relates the intimate association of St. Teilo with St. David, both in his studies under Paulinus in his monastery at Ty-gwyn-ar-Dâf (Whitland), and in the development of the British Church.||

Churches were dedicated to St. Teilo and St. Cadoc in the parish of Kidwelly, the crude walls of one of which still remain, and are known as Capel Teilo (Teilo's Chapel), and the site of the other is preserved by the name whereby a farm and district are still called Llangadog (The Church of Cadoc) and Waungadog (Cadoc's meadow). By a charter, preserved in the Public Record Office, a grant was made by Maurice de Londres of twelve acres of land around the Church of St. Cadoc, and adjoining the lands of St. Mary for the salvation of his own soul, and those of all his ancestors, in the hearing of his son William de Londres, and in the presence of specified witnesses.* This charter is undated, but as it is addressed to David, bishop of St. Davids, the transaction must have occurred between A.D. 1147 and 1176, as this could have been the only period within the lifetime of the donor when a David (Fitzgerald) was bishop of St. Davids.

Probably most of the ancient churches in Wales were called after the names of their actual founders,† and were not dedicated as modern churches are to departed saints. The dimensions of the local ruin of the church known as St. Teilo's, show that it was a small church, or oratory, and such as might only be expected to have been a mere out-post, like its sister church Llangadog, of the monasteries of St. Davids and Llandaff. This being so, Kidwelly would seem to have afforded accommodation for Christian worship as early as the seventh, if not the sixth century, when the above Welsh saints flourished. It may, however, be contended that Christian Churches of that age were constructed of wattle and mud, with hides for roofing, and not with stone, but as far as the ruined Church of St. Teilo is concerned, the writer cannot acquiesce in the belief in the backward stage of civilisation in which the contention would place the local Brythons at this time. It must be remembered that the church in question lay, not only on one of the great inter-tribal roads between Caerleon and St. Davids, which the later inhabitants of early Britain formed, but that it was also on the main Roman line of communication which led westwards from Gloucester through Caerwent, Caerleon, Cardiff, Neath, and Loughor to Carmarthen, and about midway between the two latter places, at each of which there had been a Roman station. It is therefore improbable, in view of the facilities for intercourse with the highly civilized Romans which their very geographical position would afford them, that the Brythons of the district would have remained ignorant of the art of stone building at that period. However, if these local churches had originally been erected with less enduring materials than stone, either from insufficient knowledge of the art of stone building, or from sentiment, there is no doubt that in the case of the one called after St. Teilo, the original was replaced by a stone structure whose ruins are still existent. Subsequent to the beginning of the eight century, when foundations of Welsh saints closed, the Mihangel or Michael dedications began, and the numerous Llanfihangels regularly distributed over Wales show that this dedication not only became popular, but that it also became a Welsh dedication. Tradition states that on the site of Maenllwyd-mawr already referred to, there stood a church called Llanfihangel, and the farmer on whose land the site is, testifies that he has come upon stone foundations of a substantial nature there, and that a large stone slab, with a chamfered edge, measuring 7 ft.

by 15 in., and 7 inches thick, was carted from the site to the precincts of his own house, where it now serves as a bridge across a brook at the entrance to the farm-yard. Its size and appearance would suggest that it was a large window-sill. It could not have been a Druidical relic, as by Druidic principles no monolith was allowed to be touched by any iron or metal instrument.* There is, moreover, in close proximity to Maenllwyd-mawr a well, which still goes by the name of Ffynon Mihangel (Michael's Well). There was also until recently a columbarium or pigeon house near by. The well is on the sea side of the road which intersects it from Maenllwyd-mawr, and the columbarium was between the latter and Waungadog.

All Saints' Church.—In all probability the site of the present parish church was previously occupied by an earlier church. The Welsh of by-gone ages sometimes dedicated their churches to numerous saints without specifying the names of their patrons, such as Llansaint, Llandeusant, Llantrisant, and Llanpumpsaint. A reference made by Dugdale† gives credence to the probability of a pre-existing church here, for it is stated that 'Richard Fitzwilliam gave to Sherborne Monastery the Churches of St. Ismael, and Penalt, of All Saints' at Kidwelly, and St. Elthut at Penbray; all in the diocese of St. Davids, with all that appertain to them' (see Appendix B.). The Church of Penallt is denoted by that description; and the ancient churches belonging to Kidwelly are located either by the ruins that still remain, by tradition, or by place-names which have been handed down. Besides, All Saints' Church is cited as the church of the territory of Kidwelly, by which appellation it may be concluded to have been the Mother Church of the district. There is no evidence, either traditional or otherwise, to establish the location of this particular church, as there is in the case of the other two churches above mentioned. It may therefore be assumed to have been a predecessor of the existing parish church on the same spot. It may, however, be contended that the reference to All Saints' Church points to Llansaint, in the parish of St. Ishmael ; but Llansaint does not seem to appear in any ancient documents which have reference to Kidwelly. Besides, as St. Ismael, and even Penalt and Penbray are named as contributaries, the area which the churches of Kidwelly served appears to have been at that time almost co-extensive with the present ecclesiastical parish of Kidwelly ; or, as the jurisdiction of the Incumbent came to be called ' Kidwelly within, and without the Borough.' The assumption of a pre-existent church accords also with the age of the church which now stands, whose style of architecture forbids an earlier period than the latter part of the 13th century to be assigned to it. It is also probable that the former church was the one which is said to have been burnt down, together with the town and the religious houses, by Prince Llewelyn, A.D. 1222, when he surmised that the Magistrates of Kidwelly intended to betray him to William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke.*

* Powell, p. 248.

Documentary references are made to 'the Church of St. Mary, Kidwelly,' in a period which was anterior to that which the architectural style of the present church indicates. It may therefore be assumed that the former church was, under Norman sway, re-dedicated to St. Mary, which probably would have been done after a temporary restoration.

At the time when the Taxation of Pope Nicholas IV. was made, in the year 1291, or thereabouts, the church of Kidwelly seems to have been an ecclesiastical Rectory merged in the Priory, and was at that time taxed, or valued as being of the yearly value of twenty marks (£13 6s. 8d.).

The Deanery of Kidwelly.—The following account from the Taxation of Pope Nicholas (p. 273) shows the extent of the deanery of Kidwelly, together with the value of its component churches, at the end of the 13th century—

THE PRIORY OF KIDWELLY.

A PRIORY of the Benedictine order was founded at Kidwelly by Roger, bishop of Salisbury, in the year 1130, for a Prior and two monks. This was annexed as a cell to the monastery of Sherborne Abbey, in Dorset.* As the founder figured rather prominently in the concerns of Kidwelly at this time, it may be interesting to dwell, very briefly, on his personality. This noted ecclesiastic, whom Henry I. appears to have met during his sojourn in Normandy,† was a priest of a church in Caen, and was destined to become a notable factor in the history of England during that reign, for he was appointed the Chief Justiciary and Treasurer, and was soon made bishop of Salisbury. The affairs of State were practically in his hands, and the confidence reposed in him was not misplaced, for his elevation was fully justified by his capable administration. In his zeal for the spread of his royal master's dominion, he is supposed to have crossed over to Gower, with some other adventurers, and to have proceeded along the coast through Carnwyllion to Kidwelly, districts whose inhabitants, in spite of previous invasions, still remained unsubjugated, and resentful of Norman intrusion. Kidwelly seems to have had special attraction for him, and he evidently secured from his sovereign a grant of the district for himself.‡ It is certain that he had possessions at Kidwelly in the former part of the 12th century, as it is stated by Dugdale* that by an Imprimatur of David, bishop of St. Davids, a carucate of land (probably the site of the future Priory) at Kidwelly, with the land called Mount Solomon (a corruption possibly of Mynydd Sulen), extending to the sea, was given, free of all consuetudinary payments, to the Abbey of Sherborne, in the reign of King Henry I., by Roger, bishop of Salisbury; Turstan, or Thurstan, being at that time Prior (sic) (see Appendix A.). This dignitary was consecrated Abbot of Sherborne in the year 1122. In the Taxation of Pope Nicholas IV., A.D. 1291 (p. 276), it is stated—

‘Prior de Kedwelly habet apud Kedwelly unam carucatam terrae cum redditu et perquisitis £2 10/-. Exitus animalium, Prior habet quinque vaccas.—exitus 5/-. Summa £2 15/-.’

That is—‘The Prior of Kidwelly has at Kedwelly one carucate of land with rent and perquisites £2 10/-. Issues of the animals. The Prior has five cows.—Issues 5/-. Total £2 15/-.’

The temporalities belonging to the Priory in the 26th year of King Henry VIII. are stated in ‘Valor Ecclesiasticus’ (vol. IV., 412) to have been as follows:—

‘Cell of the Priory of Kydwylly.—John Godmester, Prior there, has in temporal tenements, with demesne lands there £6 13 4 by the year. A document preserved in the Public Record Office relates a protracted ecclesiastical proceeding, dated in 1428, wherein the prior and convent of Kidwelly claimed of certain persons two parts of the tithes, real and personal, and particularly of wool, milk, cheese, and lambs, arising on certain lands within the bounds and limits of the parish of St. Mary of Kidwelly, as rectors of the same; and by this suit the said tithes were awarded to the prior and convent as rectors. The basis of the judgment on which the prior's petition was laid is given by Dugdale† (see Appendix D).

THE SITUATION OF THE PRIORY.

IT has been persistently asserted that the ancient ruins at Penallt, between Kidwelly and the mouth of the river Towy, and about a mile from the former, are those of the Priory of Kidwelly. But this must be regarded as a mere conjecture, as there appears to be no evidence whatever in its favour. Documents frequently refer to the 'Church of Penallt,' but never to the Priory of Penallt. Moreover, the 'Church of Penallt' is made to appear as distinct from the Priory of Kidwelly and its dependent churches, as those of St. Ishmael and Pembrey. The situation of Kidwelly Priory must therefore be sought for elsewhere. Happily there is abundant evidence, documentary and otherwise, in favour of associating the site of the priory with the ruins which may still be seen on the left bank of the Lesser Gwendraeth, and hard by the east boundary wall of the present parish churchyard. It is said that 'beggars are no choosers.' On this principle the monks had to be content with what land was granted to them for monastic purposes by Norman landowners, which, as a rule, was a tract of waste and unfertile soil. And it was no inconsiderable item in the regime of the monks to bring the land given them to the highest pitch of cultivation. The monks of the religious house of Kidwelly, however, do not seem to have been dealt with in a niggardly spirit, and this may be accounted for by the fact that the donor of the land which they possessed was, as has been stated, himself an ecclesiastic, viz.,

Roger, bishop of Salisbury ; who in apportioning his grant appears to have carefully considered the requirements of the institution ; such as its contiguity to the existing church (which generally was the centre around which all monastic establishments clustered, and also to a stream (see Appendix A), for its convenience. It has been already observed that the real property enjoyed by this religious community, consisted of a carucate of land—a term which the Normans introduced, and which meant a plough-land (caruca) that might be ploughed with one team of oxen in a year. The land now covered by the gardens attached to the tenements in Lady Street was, within living memory, known as ‘the priory fields.’ Ample evidence is also supplied by the proceedings at the Prior’s Court held at Kidwelly, that the land now occupied by Lady Street, or St. Mary Street, belonged to the prior. The following extracts from the ‘Court Rolls,’ in the Public Record Office, together with their bearing on the subject, may not be uninteresting as showing the condition of social life, the tenure of property, and the adjustment of differences, in those days. It may also be inferred from the proper names how the Welsh—who, at the dedication of a local cemetery at the beginning of the 12th century, had evidently become sullen, and who, either from choice or compulsion, had kept aloof from the foreign colony, which consisted of French, English, and Flemings (see Appendix A)—began to intermingle with the foreign settlers.

COURT ROLL, PORTFOLIO 215. NO. 39.—P.R.O.

' At the Court of the Prior of Kedwelly, held on Thursday next before the Feast of St. Margaret the Virgin—A.D. 1311.

' Thomas Cas offers himself against William Portereve in a plea of a convention, and demands from him half a cow. They are given a day, Sunday before the Feast of St. Margaret, the Virgin.

' William Portereve has the entry to the tenement which was that of William Bronygt, and pays for entry 10/-. Pledges John Portereve and Bernard Coqus, and has in payment two calves, and the residue at the Feast of All Saints.

' At the Court of the Prior of Cadwelly held on the morrow of the Feast of the Purification of the Blessed Mary, the Virgin—A.D. 1311.

' Walter Bernard is summoned to answer the Prior concerning a tenement which he has deprived him of, and because nothing can be found whereon to distrain him, therefore it is determined that it shall be seized into the hands of the Prior.

' John Owen and Lucy Weron have tomorrow to come to some agreement, and unless they can agree the aforesaid Lucy must be attached to the suit of the aforesaid party.

' John Howen brings a complaint against Lucy Weron, and because he does not prosecute his suit, he is amerced, and Lucy Weron goes quit.

' At the Court of the Prior of Kadwelly held on Wednesday next after the Feast of S. Barnabas, the Apostle—A.D. 1312.

' Agnes Sekeryn widow of Maurice Sekeryn brings a plea of trespass against Thomas Gower ; is amerced six pence.—Pledge Elias Kiste.

' At a Court held on Saturday next before the Feast of St. Margaret the Virgin, 35 Edw. III.

' John Pitifier, Thomas Brounyng, William Portrese, and Adam Crompe are convicted at the suit of the lord (the Prior) for trespass made by their beasts at Gabcrofte in the lord's corn, therefore they are amerced twelve pence.

' At the Court of Robert Fyfhyde, Prior of Kedwelly held on Monday next after the Feast of St. Peter, 11 Richard II.

' To this Court came Agnes ap Owen widow and surrendered into the hands of the Prior her tenement which is situated in a street called Sentemarestret [St. Mary, or our Lady Street] next to the tenement of a certain Herr ap Mad : on the one part, and the tenement of John Malier on the other part, and upon this Ievan ap Res Wyt appeared, and gave to the said Prior a fine of 20/- to have entry into the said tenement for the term of his life, and Welthian his wife ; and after their decease to remain to their daughter Margaret for the term of her life, paying therefor yearly to the Prior, and his successors 2/- at two of the three principal terms, namely Easter, and S. Michael, by equal portions, and doing one day's harvest and another at hay-making, and rendering therefor the rents and services due and customary.

'To this Court came James Richard and Johan Dayo his wife, and surrendered into the hands of the Prior their tenement which is situated in a street called Syntemarystret between the tenement of Ievan ap Yanto on the east and the tenement of a certain Herr ap Mad on the west, and upon this came Walter Weysy, and gave to the said Prior a fine of 16/- to have the entry into the said tenement for the term of his life ; and Isabell his wife, and after their death to remain to their son John for his life ; paying therefor yearly unto the Prior and his successors 2/- at Easter and St. Michael, by equal portions and doing one day's harvest, and one day haymaking, and service therefor due and customary.

'To this Court came Elena Bik, and gave the Prior for a fine forty shillings for a tenement which is situated by that of Ievan ap Owen on the south and that of John Canan on the east.

'To this Court came John Pretefer and Elan his wife and gave to the Prior for a fine forty shillings to have the right of entry into the tenement of Mabely Schynner for the term of their lives, which tenement is situated in Seyntmarestrete by the tenement of Ievan ap Yanto on the east, and that of John Stoke on the west for the term of their lives.'

The proceedings at the last court prove that the land in the immediate neighbourhood of the parish church belonged to the prior, as St. Mary Street (now called Lady Street), which runs parallel with the church, is specified as being within his ownership. The ruins already referred to are also in the vicinity of the same church, and therefore it is unnecessary to identify with the priory any other situation than this. And Leland, in his Itinerary, says—'In the new Toune is only a Chirche of our Ladi; and by this is the Celle of Blake monkes of Shirburne. Ther the Prior is Patron of our Ladi Church.' The foregoing judicial transactions also show that although some of the priory land still remained under cultivation, a considerable portion of it was let out for tenements. This, of course, would enhance the value of the property; and generally, as monastic property increased in value, and the frugality of the monks enabled them to store up their material resources, their chief pride, whether of the Benedictine or Cistercian Order, consisted in the erection of magnificent churches to the glory of God. The production of the present Parish Church is therefore not improbably due to their noble and self-denying zeal.

A list of the Priors of Kidwelly.—A diligent search among the original documents at the Public Record Office has yielded, as a result, the names of eight priors, which are here given, together with the years in which they respectively filled that capacity.

			A.D.
Galfridus de Coker	1301
Robert Dunsterr	1346
John Flode	1361
Robert Fyhyde	1428
John Shirborn	1482
John Henstryge	1490
John Whitchurch	1520
John Godmyster	1537

This list appears to give the names of the priors, in consecutive order, for 236 years, but it would appear, judging from the date of the foundation of the priory

(A.D. 1130) that Prior Galfridus de Coker was preceded in the office by others whose names and years of office it has proved too difficult to ascertain. There is no doubt that John Godmyster was the last prior, as he held the office at the Dissolution.*

The Dissolution of the Priory.—When the Priory of Kidwelly was suppressed, the Rectory, in which it was merged, fell into the hands of the Crown, and the monastic temporalities were disposed of by lease in the year 35 Henry VIII. (A.D. 1544) to certain persons of the name of George Ashe and Robert Meyrick, yeomen, and purveyors of wine to the king, for twenty-one years. This lease, a copy of which is given in Appendix F, is in the Public Record Office, and gives a minute description of the tithes thereby demised, together with the places whence they arose. Among the leased possessions, the following details are specified :—the site of the priory, all buildings, edifices, curtilages, granaries, cemeteries, pleasure-ground, orchards, gardens, and fish-ponds; and the reserved rent for the whole of the property involved is stated to have been £30 6s. 4d. Among the exceptions, however, is one of a yearly pension of £8 to the vicar.†

CONSECRATION OF AN ANCIENT CEMETERY.

THREE days after the date of the deed whereby certain lands were given by Roger, bishop of Salisbury, to Sherborne Abbey, the same donor set apart and consecrated a cemetery at Kidwelly, 'with the license and consent of Wilfrid, bishop of St. Davids' (see Appendix A). The document in question is undated, but the citation of the name of the bishop who then held the see of St. Davids helps to assign an approximate date both for the grant of land and consecration of the cemetery. Wilfrid was the last Welsh bishop of St. Davids before the Norman rule, and he appears in the official list of bishops of St. Davids under his Welsh name of Griffri.^{*} He was also known as Jeffrey as well as Gryffyth.[†] He died in 1112, and was only succeeded two years afterwards by Bernard, the first Norman bishop of St. Davids.[‡] The date of the document referred to, and therefore of the consecration of the cemetery, must have been prior to 1112. And as Wilfrid held the see from 1096 to 1112,[§] the consecration must have taken place between those dates. Henry I. did not come to the throne till 1100, and as Roger only came into prominence during his reign, these local transactions must have occurred between the years 1100 and 1112. This cemetery probably occupied the property which is numbered 760 in the Ordnance Map of 1880, and 62 in that of 1907, and which adjoins the Llansaint road about 300 yards from the castle where the deed was executed. This enclosure is, moreover, still generally known as Mynwent Domos—St. Thomas's cemetery.

It is not improbable that there was an oratory provided for this place of interment, a circumstance which would account for the tradition which claims that there was an ancient chapel on the site.

THE VICARIATE OF KIDWELLY.

THE provision of a yearly pension of £8 to the Vicar (see p. 55) shows that there was a Vicariate at Kidwelly when the priory was dissolved ; and in the ecclesiastical suit, already referred to, there is a strong presumption in favour of the previous existence of a vicariate, as it may be assumed that the third portion of the tithes which was not laid claim to by the prior and convent, belonged then to the vicar. There seems, however, little doubt that the vicariate of Kidwelly existed at the beginning of the 14th century, for in a Court Roll (portfolio 215, No. 39, P.R.O.) appears this entry :—‘At the Court of the Prior of Kedwelly, held on the day of S. Kalixtus, Pope and Martyr, A.D. 1310—Nicholas Kyngman excuses himself against Thomas Cas on plea of debt by Thomas, the Vicar.’

(1) As vicarages are generally supposed to have been established in the eighth year of Henry II. (A.D. 1162), ‘Alwyn’ may not have been vicar according to the general acceptation of the term, but he is specifically denominated as ‘the Priest of the town’ in the deed whereby a grant of land was made by Roger, bishop of Salisbury, to Sherborne Abbey, probably within the first decade of the 12th century (see Appendix A).

(2) The appointment of John Griffith was made subject to the condition that ‘an annual pension of 26s. 8d. be reserved to the previous Incumbent (John Chayny) till he be appointed to a cure.’—Bishop’s Register.

CHANTRIES.

THERE was a chantry at Kidwelly which is known to have been dedicated to St. Nicholas, and there would seem to have been more than one. It is explicitly stated in the Minister's Accounts of the Duchy of Lancaster, kept at the Public Record Office, that there was a chantry 'within the walls of the Castle of Kidwelly,' as the following translated abstracts prove :—

BUNDLE 584. NO. 9236.

'Account of Roger Aylward, Receiver of Kedwelly, Carn : Iskennyn, and Oggemour ; from 1 Octob. 43 Edward iii. to 9 Sept. next following, by his commission dated the said 1st Oct. (1367—70).

'Item, 74^s 4^d paid to Thomas Davy, Chaplain of the Chantry within the Castle of Kedwelly for this year, for his salary, and for finding bread and wine, and candles, as well for himself, as for a certain monk to celebrate within the Chantry of the said Castle for the same time.'

BUNDLE 573. NO. 9066.

'Item, allowed to the accountant for bread and wine and candles, to be provided daily throughout the year for 1 mass in the Chantry within the Castle to be celebrated by the Prior and monks of the Priory of Kedwelly, 6^s 8^d.'

The dedication of this chantry is not given, but it is improbable that in a purely military establishment, such as the castle was, the chantry would have been dedicated to St. Nicholas ; for this saint—presumably the Bishop of Myra—is the patron of scholars and mariners.* Sea-faring, with its important branch of shipbuilding, which is known at a later period to have become, in no small measure, a means of livelihood to the local community, had probably been the development of centuries, and the association between the nature of the people's employment and St. Nicholas might well have commended itself to the consideration of the founder in his selection of a patron for his chantry at Kidwelly. It would therefore be more natural to seek the location of this chantry within the precincts of the parish church rather than in the castle, which would necessarily have been prohibited to civilians. There is also a further and more palpable reason against assigning this chantry to the castle, for by an Act of Parliament passed in the first year of Edward VI., cap. 14, all foundations of chantries, chapels, and guilds which had not been in the actual possession of King Henry VIII., were given to the king. At the dissolution of the chantries, the property belonging to the chantry of St. Nicholas was seized by the Crown, and disposed of under a lease dated 12th March, 3 Edward VI., to a certain John Goodale, for a term of 21 years, from Easter, 1548, upon payment of a total rent of 45/- (see Appendix G). This lease would hardly have been necessary if the castle chantry had been that of St. Nicholas, as it would already have been Crown property, the castle and lordship of Kidwelly, which had been held by the De Londres family, having passed into the Duchy of Lancaster when Maud de Cadurcis, who held Ogmore and Kidwelly, was married to Henry, Earl of Lancaster. Maud's property accordingly was annexed to the Crown, through the Duke of Lancaster, and Blanche, who was married to John of Gaunt, when Henry IV. succeeded to the throne of England (see the genealogy of the de Londres family, p. 23). The fact also that the priests of the castle chantry were, as has been seen, paid direct by the local receiver of the Duchy, is itself an acknowledgment that it was an institution which belonged to the Duchy of Lancaster, now merged in the Crown, and for which the Crown held itself responsible.

It may, moreover, be said that chantries were most frequently formed within existing churches, such as the ends of aisles, as is the case in St. John's Church, Brecon, and many other ancient churches which may be cited ; or in cruciform churches, such as the Parish Church of Kidwelly, in the transept. It is beyond doubt that the south transept of the latter church is a distinct appendage to the main building. In fact, it is called the Mansel Chapel to this day. Whether the Mansel family (of Muddlescwm) within the parish originally erected it does not appear ; but a mural tablet, which may still be seen there, records the fact that it was, at any rate, restored by one of that name. The inscription is as follows :—‘ Near this place lieth the body of the Reverend Mr. John Mansel of this town, M.A., and late Vicar of Pembrey, who departed this life the fifth day of December, 1766 : aged 73 years. . . . This Chappel was rebuilt in the year 1767 at the expense of the above John Mansel.’

In this transept chapel, near the south-east angle of the inner wall, there is a good specimen, well preserved, of a piscina, and there are two tombs formed, and arched in the south wall. Archæologists have frequently pointed out the shortness of the transepts as being one of the peculiar features of the church, inasmuch as they are not symmetrical with the other proportions of the original dimensions of the present church. This, therefore, as well as the fact that the end centre of one is about three feet out of line with that of the other, supports the theory of their being mere annexations. Chantries, when formed within parish churches, were screened off with traceried wood-work from the main building, but no trace of this can be discovered in the arch which divides this chapel from the church. In the shafts of the arch which separates the north transept from the nave, however, regular sockets, which have been stopped, may still be seen on both sides. Besides this, while making excavations in the year 1903, preparatory to laying down a heating apparatus, a sarcophagus was discovered beneath the surface in this transept. As the chantry, or chantry chapel, became the tomb of the founder, it is not improbable that this was the receptacle of the mortal remains of the founder for whom masses were said in this particular chantry. The prima facie evidence, therefore, afforded by these discoveries, favours the theory that the north transept was once used as a chantry, and the foregoing considerations have likewise an equal tendency to prove that this was the position of the 'chantry of St. Nicholas.'

THE PARISH CHURCH.

IT would seem, as has been already observed (see p. 44), that the present parish church was erected on the foundation of a previous edifice which probably had been a temporary restoration of the church which is said to have been burnt down, together with the town, by Prince Llewelyn in the year 1222.* It was one of the comparatively few monastic churches which were preserved at the suppression of the monasteries, and permitted to remain as the church of the parish; the priory churches of Brecon and Monkton being similar exceptions in the diocese of St. Davids. It is dedicated, as might have been expected under the circumstances, to St. Mary; for the Marian dedication became popular under Norman influence, and the Marian churches, as they are called, were generally found in towns, and under the shadow of the Norman castles, as well as in secluded places in connection with Cistercian Monasteries. In his 'History of the Diocese of St. Davids,' the Venerable Archdeacon Bevan, who at all times is a most trustworthy authority on any subject he has written upon, whether historical, archæological, or otherwise, thus describes the church—'Kidwelly Church may be cited as the best example, among parochial churches, of the Decorated Style in this diocese, its distinctive features being the large span of its nave, its spacious chancel, short transepts, and lofty tower surmounted by a graceful spire.' handed down to the present incumbent is a somewhat exhaustive report made by Sir George Gilbert Scott, after a careful personal survey of the church in the year 1854, in view of a projected restoration of the edifice at that time. It is as follows :—

‘ The church is one of the most remarkable in South Wales, and though retaining many of the features characteristic of the district, it would appear, as far as its details are concerned, to be the work of an architect from some other neighbourhood. It consists of a nave of the extraordinary span of 33 feet in the clear, without aisles, small north and south transepts, and an ample chancel, forming altogether a simple and uniform cross. The tower stands at the north-western angle of the nave, forming a north porch, opposite which is an ordinary porch on the south side. There is also an ample sacristy, or vestry, on the north side of the chancel.

‘ The plan is, however, not precisely of its original form, as the nave has been very considerably shortened, so that the tower and the porch, instead of being, as at present, at the western angles, were formerly about midway between those angles and the transepts.

‘ Though the tower would appear at first sight of earlier date, I am inclined to believe that the whole church (excepting, of course, alterations and mutilations of comparative modern periods) is of one age, and that it was erected, on one uniform design, about the end of the reign of Edward II., or early in that of Edward III.

‘ The chancel and the tower are the only parts which now show very distinctly the original character of the church. They appear at first sight to differ greatly in style, the chancel having rich flowing tracery in its windows, while those of the tower are of a severe lancet form. On close examination, however, I am led to the conclusion that this is not the result of any difference in their dates, but merely of a desire for the one feature to be as rich, and the other as simple, as their means on the one hand, and the style of the period on the other, would permit. I draw this conclusion from the following evidence :—There is so strong a resemblance between the mouldings of the doorways (including both of those in the tower) and the arches into the chancel and transepts, as to prove them all to be of one age. As, therefore, the window tracery of the nave is gone, it might be objected that the nave, with the transept and chancel arches, may be all of earlier date than the chancel itself. I find, however, a loophole on the south side of the nave, distinctly agreeing with the style and age of the chancel ; and, on further examination, I find another in the staircase of the tower, with an ogee arch, pointing at the same age. These indications, taken in connection with the perfect unity of the general plan, convince me that the whole is of one date, and that the lancet windows of the tower are merely the result of economy.

‘ The tower, however, though so severely simple, is a very noble structure ; it is of great size, and is surmounted by a good spire, perfectly plain and unperforated. It unites, externally, the usual type of its period with that more distinctly characteristic of the district, particularly in retaining the high battering basement so constant in Welsh towers, though the angles are flanked with two buttresses. The lower story of the tower, internally, is vaulted ; it is faced with rough stone, and has a singularly picturesque character. The nave is perfectly simple in its character, both within and without. The windows have been reduced to mere arched openings by the destruction of the mullions and tracery, excepting only the west window, which, dating only from the shortening of the nave, is a late perpendicular window of rude character. The only remaining internal features of the nave are the three great arches, which are of a very bold and good character, and the doorways, which are simple, but good. The transepts are in much the same condition with the nave ; that on the south side, however, has one window retaining its mullion, but apparently not of the original date. This transept has several arched recesses for tombs, and several sepulchral slabs have been found in both transepts.

‘ The chancel is the portion which not only was, from the first, the most highly finished, but which retains most of its original beauty. The east window was of five lights, but unhappily, its mullions and tracery have been removed, and I fear its design will, with difficulty, be recovered from the fragments scattered in different parts of the borough. On the south side, however, two windows retain the whole of their tracery, and the other a portion of it ; all are of excellent character. On the north side the windows are blocked, but one seems nearly perfect. The sedilia and piscina are perfect, and of very good design.

' The vestry has been in a great measure re-built on the old foundation. It has formerly been of two stories. The stairs to the upper story remain, with a very perfect traceried loop-hole opening into the chancel. On the other side of the vestry door are well moulded octagonal brackets for lights.

' The chancel arch is segmental, and very low, not extending above the height of the side walls of the nave. There is a rood-stair, the entrance of which is blocked up, but it would appear as if it must have opened over the chancel arch, over which the rood-loft may probably have extended, an arrangement which would account for the lowness of the arch.

' The roofs are throughout of late date. That to the chancel is the best, but appears to be about the time of James I. ; that to the nave is probably of the last century (18th), but is in many parts decayed, and hardly safe.

' The walls are of massive thickness, and are generally in a sound state.

' The parapet of the tower is nearly all gone, and the upper part of the spire has been re-built so badly as to destroy its symmetry.

Consequent upon the catastrophe which befel the parish church in the year 1884, when the spire was struck by lightning, and the top masonry was hurled through the roof of the nave, the defective and dilapidated work alluded to in the above report has been well and substantially restored under the direction of Messrs. Middleton and Prothero, Architects. The spire, which had been but indifferently rebuilt after a similar catastrophe in the 17th century, to which the registers bear witness, has now been restored to its original and symmetrical proportions, and at a renovation in 1904 it was also pierced. The west window, complained of as ' being of a rude character,' has been replaced by a perpendicular window of good style and workmanship. The other windows of the nave have also received new mullions, though not the original tracery ; and the roof of the nave, which could only have been placed on massive walls, cannot but appeal to the admiration of all who observe it, as well as reflect much credit on the designers. It will have been noticed that the period assigned by Sir Gilbert Scott to the building was 'about the end of the reign of Edward II., or early in that of Edward III.' This would mean the former part of the 14th century. This contention, however, has not remained unchallenged, for Dr. Freeman, the once celebrated antiquary, who accompanied the members of the Cambrian Archæological Association in their visit to Kidwelly in August, 1875, maintained that the church had a 14th century nave added to a 13th century tower.* Mr. Edward Laws, F.S.A., of Tenby, at a visit of the same association in August, 1906, also held that certain portions of the chancel, such as the rich moulding of the piscina and the tracery of the small circular loophole in the opposite wall, point distinctly to the early English style of architecture.

Sir Gilbert Scott, even, had some hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that the whole church belonged to one age, on account of a seeming difference between the architectural style adopted in the tower and in other parts of the building. His eventual decision was, in fact, the result of a more minute scrutiny of the various portions than was primarily instituted by him; and it was based on the testimony borne by the resemblance, in the first place, between the mouldings of the tower doorways and those of the chancel and transept arches; and secondly, between the loophole in the staircase of the south wall of the nave, and another in the stair-case of the tower, which have similar arches, and are therefore claimed to be contemporaneous. The transition from the Early English to the Decorated style seems to have been so gradual that it is said to be impossible to draw a sharp line of demarcation between them. So imperceptible is the transition in its various stages, that each style may be sub-divided into early, middle, and late, the early being often mixed with the previous style, and the later dragging on to the subsequent one.* There seems, therefore, to be no reason, in the case of this church, which by a consensus of opinion, belongs to the incipient stage of the Decorated period, viz., the latter part of the 13th or the former part of the 14th century, why the Early English Style should not yet have lingered in the transition to the Early Decorated.

* 'Carmarthen Journal,' August 27, 1875.

Its Architectural Features.—These are—

- (1) The numerous stair-cases in the walls.
- (2) The peculiar lowness of the chancel arch.
- (3) The segmental character of the main arches.
- (4) The great breadth of the nave, and absence of aisles.
- (5) The abrupt terminations of the transepts.
- (6) The number of its sepulchral recesses.

There are four stair-cases within the walls of the building. The one in the south wall of the nave possibly constituted an approach to a rostrum whence the Epistle was read, and the one, the entrance to which is gained from the north transept, probably led to a similar rostrum whence the Gospel was read. The stair-case near the angle formed by the pillars of the chancel and south transept arches is a spiral one, and led to the rood-loft above. To the right of the entrance to this stair-case is a stoup which probably was used for ablution before any ascent to the rood-loft was made. The other stair-case is in the main wall of the sacristy, or vestry. This starts from what originally was the first floor, and the traceried loophole already referred to, opens into it, thus serving as a window, and possibly also as a squint, for it is not improbable that the first floor of the sacristy was used as an anchoret cell, where a recluse found his or her permanent home. The tracery of the circular loophole represents a wheel, and is indicative of the flight of time.

Anchorages were frequently attached to a church, and were occupied by anchorites that belonged to a religious order, and bound, of their own free will, by a vow of seclusion. Female recluses often made their abode in such cells, partly for protection, and also for the sake of religious advantages which such a location would naturally afford. The doors of the cell were either locked or blocked up with masonry under the authority of the head of the order to which the inmates belonged, either for a period of years or for life. The cell generally had three shuttered windows, one opening into a chamber for the anchorite's attendant, another through which any necessary communication with the outside world could be made, while the third looked, as the loophole in this instance does, into the sanctuary of the church.

The peculiar lowness of the chancel arch may be accounted for by the presumption, which is borne out by the height of the spiral stair-case, that the rood-loft. extended above the arch. The segmental formation of this, and the other main arches, effect an angle with the pillar abruptly, and have no continuous imposts nor capitals to the shafts. The corbels on which rested the canopy over the loft are still preserved in the wall. The change of mouldings also at the junction is considered by Dr. Freeman to be rare in England, and is reminiscent of later French work.*

The extraordinary breadth of the nave, without aisles, is also thought by the same authority to belong to some south Gaulish church.

The transepts start direct from the nave, and not from a central tower, as is usually the case in monastic churches, and their unsymmetrical abruptness, supports the contention which has already been made, that they are mere annexations to the main building.

There are, altogether, six arched sepulchral tombs. Two of these are in the chancel, two in the south chapel, and two in the nave. Those in the chancel and nave have no monumental slabs, but one of those in the south chapel is occupied by a recumbent effigy of one who might have been a local domina, with an illegible inscription, and the other by a slab bearing an incised cross supposed to belong to the 15th century, but which has been appropriated by a comparatively modern alderman of the borough. It is probable that the sepulchral arch in the north wall of the sacrarium was used as a recess for entombing the rood, or the Crucifix in the rood-loft during the interval between Good Friday and the morning of Easter Day. There is also a monument, now placed in an erect position in the south chapel, of a civilian, clad in the tunica talaris, which is said to belong to the 14th century.*

* 'Arch. Camb.', Series IV., Vol. vi., p. 412.

Figure of the Madonna and the Infant Saviour.—The church rejoices in the possession of a unique figure of the Virgin, crowned, bearing the infant Saviour, and a bird, in pure white alabaster, a good specimen of 15th century art. The sculpture is, however, considerably mutilated, both by reason of exposure to the elements in Puritanical times, and rough handling. The head of the child is gone, as well as the left arm of the Virgin. One of the birds and a section of the lower part are also wanting. Still, sufficient is left to give a fairly accurate idea of its pristine beauty. It was once lodged in the niche above the door of the south porch, where, within living memory, women curtsied to it on entering and leaving the church. From this position, however, it was taken down in the year 1875, seemingly to the chagrin of many of the parishioners, and was cursorily buried in the churchyard, whence it was, on remonstrance, again unearthed and placed in the tower. It is now in the sacristy awaiting restoration. Its original position would seem to have been the niche in the wall on the south side of the east end of the nave, where it proudly stood beneath the rood-loft, and above the approach to the spiral rood-stairs.

The Church Plate.—The inventory of goods pertaining to the church which was returned by the Commissioners appointed for that purpose at the beginning of the reign of Edward VI. (1552), included the following:—

2 chalices of silver, partly gilt.

A small cross of silver, partly gilt.

A censer of silver.

A pyx of silver.

4 bells, great and small.

One chalice, in the hands of Morys ap Rhys, Gent.

Nothing is now known of these accessories. The oldest existing vessels are a silver chalice and paten, both dating from the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The chalice bears the following inscription in Latin: ‘Poculum * Ecclesie * de * Kydwelly * 15 * 74,’ and is pronounced by connoisseurs to be one of the best specimens of Elizabethan ecclesiastical plate in the diocese of St. Davids.

The Registers.—The parochial records extend back to the year 1626, and there are what appear to be extracts from a previous register. These latter date from the year 1586. All the entries down to A.D. 1733 are in Latin, and are in bold and legible caligraphy.

The systematic registration of baptisms, marriages, and burials was only established at the end of the reign of Henry VIII. A royal injunction was issued by Thomas Cromwell, Vicar-General, Sept. 29, 1538, demanding the incumbent of every parish to ‘keep one book or register, which book he shall, every Sunday, take forth, and in the presence of the churchwardens, or one of them, write and record in the same all the weddings, christenings, and burials made the whole week before.' The first register books seem to have been of paper, but in 1597 it was enacted that every parish provide itself with a parchment book, into which the entries in the paper registers were to be transcribed. This enactment will therefore account for the entries which appear at the beginning of the earliest parchment register of Kidwelly, for they are probably copies made from a previous record book.

One of the records in the local registers is specially interesting, not only as a chronicle of an untoward event, but also as conveying an antiquated atmospheric idea. It is as follows :—

' Upon the 29th day of October 1481, the steeple of Kidwelly fell downe by lightning and a clap of thunder between one and two o'clock in the afternoon.—From lightning and tempest ; from battle and murder, and from sudden death, Good Lord, deliver us.'

Church Restoration.—Consequent on the lightning disaster of 1884, the measure of church restoration adopted and carried out was comprehensive, and involved an outlay of £1813 8s. 1d.

Church Bells.—For many years the belfry of the parish church has contained a peal of bells. It used to be a common saying that ' Kidwelly bells were heard at Swansea,' and this is accounted for by a local tradition which states that the bells which had been originally intended for Kidwelly were taken by sea to Swansea. However, if the tradition in reference to a confusion in the consignment of the local bells be founded on fact, Kidwelly has now received ample compensation in the splendid pipe organ which was purchased at a reasonable price in 1907 from the vicar and churchwardens of St. Mary's Church, Swansea. The following extract from The New Monthly Magazine for March 1, 1820, may be of interest, inasmuch as it shows that the bells were formerly swung, and that some were re-cast about the time when the notice appeared in the above periodical. 'The inhabitants of Kidwelly were highly entertained on the 24th ult. by the revival of church bell-ringing, having for many years been destitute of that gratifying melodious music, in consequence of four bells out of the original peal being broken, which deficiency was supplied by John Kingston, bell-founder, of Bridgewater by four new ones.'

The present peal consists of six bells, and are fixed for chiming only, it being thought that this method would conduce to the safety of the tower masonry. They were re-cast by Charles Carr, Ltd., Bell-founders, Smethwick, in 1902, at the cost of £140, and were dedicated, together with a new altar and reredos, by the Lord Bishop of St. Davids on May 3rd of the same year.

The Town Clock.—This is also in the church steeple. When the tower was struck by lightning in the year 1884, the interior workings were badly damaged, and the clock was stopped for several years. In 1902, however, it was restored, and the dials were raised to a higher elevation at the expense of the municipal corporation, in commemoration of the Coronation of King Edward VII.

ST. TEILO'S MISSION CHURCH.

This was erected in 1892 to supply the spiritual needs of residents of Mynydd-y-Garreg. The site, which originally was a leasehold, was converted into freehold property in the year 1902.

THE MUNICIPAL BOROUGH CHARTERS.

CONSIDERABLE facilities were given in the reign of Henry I. towards the attainment of municipal privileges in England, and also in those parts of Wales which had been colonised, as Kidwelly was, by Norman settlers. The feudal system was introduced into the government of towns after the Conquest, and the English rights of sac and soc were understood to imply a manorial estate.

The first charter to Kidwelly was granted by Henry I. to Roger, bishop of Salisbury, and lord of the manor, between 1103 and 1112. Practically, it was a provision for the freedom of the lord, and the immunity of the men of his demesne, from tolls and consuetudinary dues. This charter appears to have been confirmed by Henry II. to William de London, and his son William secured its confirmation from King John in 1205, and again from Henry III. in 1228.*

Sometimes the example of the king was followed by the lords who granted charters to their towns, and they often obtained permission from the Crown to grant greater privileges than in their own right they could do. The charter which Henry, Duke of Lancaster, and lord of the manor of Kidwelly, granted to the town in 1357†, is a local instance of this beneficence. This may more strictly be regarded as a grant of certain rights and privileges of quite secondary importance, and exemption from certain tolls, than a regular charter. Reference to its provisions is made in the Appendix.

* 'Arch. Camb.,' Series IV., Vol. ix, p. 82.

† 30 Edward III.

Down to this time no charter had been given which contained a hint of corporate existence.

In 1444, however, a charter was granted by Henry VI. which definitely provided for incorporation, and which, in this sense, may be regarded as the original Charter of Kidwelly (see Appendix).

In 1541, on the application of the mayor of Kidwelly, the previous charter was confirmed by Patent of Henry VIII., dated February 20, in the 32nd year of his reign.

In 1551, the same charter was again confirmed by Patent of Edward VI., dated May 20, in the 4th year of his reign.

In 1619, a new and elaborate charter was granted to the borough by James I., dated July 16, in the 16th year of his reign.* This is the charter by which the borough was governed in the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries, until it was replaced by the last charter. The full text of the charter of James I. is given in the Appendix.

In 1885 the latest charter was granted, a copy of which is also given in the Appendix.

It is sad to relate that the originals of all the early charters are lost!

Although efforts have been made to recover that of James I., as an old minute book of the corporation testifies, all attempts to regain possession of it have so far been futile. This document can hardly be of any use or value to any private individual, while to the mayor and corporation, its rightful custodians, it would be a priceless possession. In the hope, therefore, that this book may help in the quest, an appeal is made to any of its readers who may have some knowledge about its whereabouts to acquaint the municipal authorities with the fact. It need hardly be said that anyone who would vouchsafe such information as might lead to its recovery, would confer an inestimable boon on the ancient borough. Publicity is hereby given to a clue provided by a representation which is placed on record at the foot of the minutes of the Hall Day held at the Guildhall of the borough on Friday, July 18, 1783 :—

* 'Arch. Camb.', Series III., Vol. iii., p. 1.

‘Whereas one of the Charters of this borough was delivered to Mr. Pember, an Attorney at Gloucester, to be given in evidence in a cause there depending, wherein he was concerned, and Mr. Pember having in answer to a letter sent him by the Town Clerk, informed us that he delivered the said Charter to Mr. Leonard Bilson Gwyn, in order to be returned to this corporation, and that he has his receipt for the same; and several applications having been made to the said Mr. Leonard Bilson Gwyn to deliver up the said Charter, he hath given for answer that he had delivered the same to the late Mr. Lewis Rogers in his lifetime. And whereas, on inspecting the Town Chest, the said charter is not to be found therein, and if the fact (sic) be true, that the same charter was delivered to Mr. Lewis Rogers, it probably must have remained (not being found in the chest) among his papers, which papers are in the custody or power of Mr. Gwyn, but it appears to us that Mr. Gwyn has, since the death of Mr. Rogers, confessed the said charter was in his custody. It is therefore ordered that application be made to the Court of King’s Bench in the next Michaelmas term for a mandamus to be directed to the said Mr. Leonard Bilson Gwyn, to shew cause why he should not deliver up the said charter to the corporation.

And that it be referred to the Mayor, Recorder, and Justice, with the assistance of the Town Clerk, to consider and prepare the necessary means for such application. And they are to lay the same before the Council at a future meeting thereof. And it is further ordered that the Town Clerk do cause a copy of this Order to be delivered to the said Mr. Gwyn, that he may prevent the necessity of the application to the Court of King's Bench, if he thinks proper.'

Unhappily, Gwyn's expulsion from the aldermanic chair by the unanimous vote of the council, on the plea of non-residence, is recorded in the same document. This seems to have aggravated a difference which had arisen between him and the corporation in 1780 by reason of the refusal, on the part of the latter, to renew to him a lease of the tin mills, a refusal which afterwards was made subject to a lawsuit. Leonard Bilson Gwyn was mayor in 1779. He seems to have resided latterly at Swansea; and in a document, reference to which is made in the minutes of the Hall Day held July 23, 1787, Eliza Maria Wigley is represented to have been his daughter. In 1788 the corporation renewed the lease formerly granted to Gwyn in the name of Gabriel Powell, of Gellihir, Glamorganshire.

The Seal and Arms of the Borough.—It will be seen from the illustration that this is a somewhat inelegant heraldry, and its conception appears to be due to a misapprehension of Leland's extraordinary etymology of the name Kidwelly (see page 3), for Leland's mythical Cattas seems to have been taken for a cat!

Markets and Fairs.—Two markets and one fair were established by charter as far back as the latter part of the 13th century, as testified by the following extract :—

PLATE XIX.

SEAL OF THE BOROUGH.

From a Photograph by Mr James Henry Davies, Kidwelly

'Grant to Payn de Chaworth, and his heirs, of two weekly markets at Keddewelly, in the March of Wales; one on Tuesday, and the other on Saturday; and of a yearly Fair there on the [vigil] of the Feast, and the morrow, of St. Mary Magdalen, and the five days following.'—Charter Rolls, 52 Henry III., Oct. 22, 1268.—P.R.O.

The markets and fairs were leased to the bailiff of the town 22 Richard II., Feb. 3, 1398, for 30s. yearly.*

The markets have now been discontinued on account of the proximity of Carmarthen and Llanelly, and the travelling facilities between Kidwelly and those towns; but fairs are still held on the following dates:—St. Luke's fair, Oct. 29 (hiring and pleasure). Gwenllian fair, first Monday in December (cattle and pigs). August fair, August 3rd and 4th (cattle first day, pigs second day). May fair, first Tuesday after the 20th of May (horses, cattle, and pigs). The last named was established in the year of the Coronation of King Edward VII.

DOMESTIC BUILDINGS, AND NOTED FAMILIES.

BOTH Celts and Saxons were content with the crudest architecture, and an advance of this art amongst them came through foreign influence. It remained, therefore, for the Normans, and Flemings who followed in their wake, to hand down to posterity what still remains at Kidwelly of mediæval architecture, domestic as well as ecclesiastical. Among the domestic remains may be mentioned two mansions, Llechdwnny and Muddlescwm.

Llechdwnny (Donne's Refuge).—Llechdwnny is one of the few mansions marked in Speed's map of Carmarthenshire in 1610. The ruins of this mansion are on an eminence which overlooks Kidwelly, and about two miles to the north-east of the town. The walls that still remain show that it was an oblong building, the length extending from south to north. It is 55 yards long by 36 yards wide, and is now occupied by an orchard. At the north-east angle a round tower may still be traced, and there is a corresponding projection at the south-east angle, where probably another round tower stood. Adjoining the mansion on the east is a fruit garden which covers 2 acres, and which is inclosed by a wall 9 ft. high and 2 ft. thick. It is lined throughout with 4 in. red brick-work. On the east side there is a terrace extending from the north to the south wall, and at each end of the terrace there was a round tower corresponding to those at the north-west and south-west angles of the mansion proper. The garden towers would command a magnificent view of the Vale of Towy on one side, and of Kidwelly and the sea on the other.

Muddlescwm (Middlescombe).—Beyond the ruined walls which rise only a few feet from the ground, but which still give an accurate idea of the proportions of the mansion, nothing remains except the granary, some outhouses, and the farmhouse, still known as Muddlescwm, which formerly was the attendant's hall of the mansion, and which remains intact. The area covered by the mansion is 33 yards by 25 yards. The thickness of the walls is 2 ft. 2 in. The principal entrance is at the south-west angle, which is now blocked by an out-building. There is another entrance at the north-east angle which seems to have been surmounted by a turret. The foundations of the ground chambers are still traceable. Adjoining the north wall of the mansion is the fruit garden, measuring 28 yards square, and surrounded by a wall built of red brick throughout on a stone foundation. The thickness of the wall is 21 ins., and the height 9 ft. The granary is to the south of the principal entrance of the mansion, and the precincts still preserve the pebble pavement. The approach is also pitched, as well as a way opposite the mouth of the outer entrance, which leads through the middle of the field to the supposed site of Llanfihangel Chapel.

These two mansions have been rendered historic by reason of the celebrated families that resided in them. The pedigrees of these families, between which there was much inter-marrying, are given by Mr. George T. Clark in his 'Genealogies of Morgan [Margam] and Glamorgan,' thus :

' Harry of Bryncoch, married 1st Margaret, daughter of William Thomas, of Oldcastle ; 2nd Elizabeth, daughter of Morgan Dun of Kidwelly (p. 103).

' Morgan Gwyn, m. Mary dr. of Howel Jenkin-ychan of Kidwelly, and had 1 David, 2 John, 3 Owen Gwyn, of the Old Bailey had (a) Elizabeth, (b) Ann : 4 Maude, who married William David Meredith of Kidwelly (p. 207).

' Morgan ap Ievan Gwyn m. Margaret dr. of Howel ap Jenkin Vychan of Kidwelly, and had 1 Owen Gwyn, 2 David, 3 Maud m. William ap David ap Meredith of Kidwelly (p. 208).

' Maud (daughter of Sir Robert Vaughan of Tretower) m. Henry Dunn of Kidwelly (p. 239).

' Sir Thomas Morgan of Langstone and Pencoyd in Llanmartin, 1482—Issue 1 Sir William, 2 John, whence Morgan of Caerleon, 3 Henry, 4 Philip, whence—

Morgan of Kidwelly (p. 320).

' Philip Morgan of Kidwelly, fourth son of Sir Thomas of Pencoyd, married a daughter of Sir Rhys ap Thomas, and had 1 William Morgan, who had 2 Henry Morgan, father of 3 Walter Morgan (p. 325).

' Morgan of Muddlescombe.—Treherne Morgan of Muddlescombe, High Steward of the Commote of Kidwelly and of Pembroke : he built the house of Llandilo-Abercowyn ; m. Jenet dr. and co-h. of Harry Dwn of Picton. Issue—1 Harry, 2 Owen, 3 Anthony (whence a branch), 4 Elizabeth, 5 Sysly, 6 Ann, 7 Catherine.

' Harry Morgan of Muddlescombe m. Margaret dr. of Henry Wogan. Issue—1 William, 2 John, 3 Treherne, 4 Thomas, 5 Ellen, 6 Catherine, 7 Ann.

' William Morgan of Muddlescombe m. Catherine dr. of William Thomas of Llangathen. Issue—1 Henry, 2 Thomas (1596), 3 Mary, 4 Liws, 5 Blanche.

' Henry Morgan m. Elizabeth dr. of Morris Rhys ap Morris ap Owain ap Gryffith ap Nicholas of Llechdonni. Issue—1 Mary co-h. m. Anthony son of Sir Edward Mansel of Margam. 2 Catherine (1596) m. Francis, son of Sir Edward Mansel, and had (a) Walter, (b) Anthony, (c) Francis, (d) Richard, (e) John, (f) Mary, (g) Jenet.'

Anterior to the beginning of the 15th century Llechdwnny belonged to a family of the name of Gwyn-

Lloide. At this time the last named family was summarily deprived of the patrimony through outlawry, and the property was bestowed on the Donne family, as the extract given below will show—

‘Grant for life to the king’s esquire John Donne, of all lands, late of Griffin ap Walter ap Ievan in the commots of Kedewelly and Carnewalthan [Carnwyllion], and a mansion with all enclosed demesnes round it, late of William Gwyn ap Rees Lloide in the commot of Kidewelly, forfeited to the king on account of their rebellion, to the value of 20 marks yearly, so that he answer for any surplus and stay in person armed with one archer in his company during the rebellion in South Wales on the safe-custody of the Castle of Kedewelly, and the country adjacent, without wages or reward.’—Patent Rolls, 5 Henry IV., Dec. 1, 1403.

The Donne family, said to have descended from Meurig, prince of Dyfed, seems to have inter-married also with the family of Rees of Kilymaenllwyd, whose original residence is said to have been Llechdwyny. At one period the last-named family bore the name of Bowen, or ab Bowen, and is supposed to have descended from Owen, the second son of Gryffith ap Nicholas of Dynevor, who was uncle to Sir Rhys ap Thomas, the celebrated Captain of South Wales.*

The following genealogical table, communicated by Mr. G. R. Brigstocke, Ryde, gives a later succession of the Llechdwyny family :—

‘Rees Bowen, of Llechdwyny, married Catherine, daughter of John, son of Henry Morgan, of Muddlescwm.

‘Morris Bowen, do. 1615, m. Maud, dr. of Sir John Wgan, of Bwlston, Pems.

‘Mary, dr. of Morris Bowen, do., m. John Brigstocke, who purchased Llechdwyny from his father-in-law.

* ‘Burke’s Visitation of Seats and Arms, 1852,’ Vol. II.

' Owen Brigstocke, do. 1657, m. Jane, dr. of Sir Wm. Vaughan, Torycoed, Llangendeirne.

' William Brigstocke, do. 1713, m. Winifred, dr. of Robert Byrt, Llwyndyris, Cardiganshire.

' Owen Brigstocke, do. 1746, m. Anne, dr. of Dr. Edward Browne, Northfleet.

' William Brigstocke, do. 1751, m. Mary, dr. of Francis Lloyd, Glyn, Llangendeirne.

' Owen Brigstocke, do. 1778, m. Anne, dr. of John Williams, Bwlchgywynt, Mydrim.

' William Owen Brigstocke, do. 1831, m. Anne, dr. of Edward Probyn, Newland, Gloucester.

' William Owen Brigstocke, do. 1861, s.p.

' Rev. John Brigstocke, do. 1858, m. Catherine Mary, dr. of Sir William Champion de Crespigny, Bart.'

It will have been observed that the original name of the Muddlescwin family was Morgan, its patronymic being exchanged by marriage at the end of the 16th century for that of Mansel (see page 84). A record kept in the parish register states that Francis Mansel was created baronet on the 14th day of January, 1621.

Domestic Flemish Architecture.—Several good specimens of this quaint architecture are preserved in some of the dwelling houses in the town. Its chief features are the semi-detached chimney shafts which are built against the side of the house, and the outside stair-case. Illustrations of two of these are given.

OLD HOUSES IN KIDWELLY.

LOCAL CELEBRITIES.

KIDWELLY may well be proud of the production of a goodly number of men who from time to time have distinguished themselves in court circles, diplomacy, literature, and administrative capacity. Among these may be mentioned the following:—

Master Walter Hogas of Kidwelly, parson of the Church of Rostyen, was nominated attorney for one year, for the purpose of going beyond the seas with the king.*

William Wrench of Kidwelly was appointed by Letters Patent deputy, during pleasure, to the office of chief butler in the port of Southampton.†

Geoffrey Kydwelly was appointed, during pleasure, surveyor of all the king's castles, lordships, manors, and lands, and the subsidy, ulnage, and forfeiture of cloth, in the counties of Somerset, Dorset, Devon, and Cornwall, and receiver of the same; rendering his account yearly at the exchequer, with authority to enquire into the value of the premises, and certify thereon to the king and council.‡

Maurice Kydwelly was appointed to a similar office in the counties of Hereford, Gloucester, Worcester, Wilts, Oxford, and Berks, and the town of Bristol.§

Philip Morgan, Kydwelly, received an appointment for life as the king's attorney-general in all the king's courts of record in England and Wales, receiving the accustomed fees, with power of appointing clerks and officers under him.* He was also appointed in the succeeding reign, deputy of the king's kinsman Francis, Lord Lovell, chief butler of England, in the port of Pole, and ports and places adjacent, receiving the accustomed fees.† Tradition also associates this local worthy with the early stages of the plot originated in an interview, at Brecon, during the progress of the Wars of the Roses between John Morton, bishop of Ely, and Henry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, which had for its object the reconciliation of the Houses of York and Lancaster, by inviting Henry, earl of Richmond—the future Henry VII.—to accept the Crown of England, on condition that he marry Elizabeth of York; and it is stated that Philip Morgan was one of the messengers sent in 1483 to Henry, then in honourable custody in Brittany, with the details of the plot.

In a life of Henry VII. submitted for review to the late Mr. James Routledge, an author and man of letters, who was by marriage closely connected with Kidwelly, occurs this passage:—‘Henry determined to land in this district. He had received messages from one Morgan of Kidwelly, a lawyer, that Rhys ap Thomas, a valiant captain of South Wales, and another named Sir John Savage, were ready to take his part; and he had every reason to believe that his uncle Jasper Tudor, on his re-appearance in that country, would be at once greeted as Earl of Pembroke, notwithstanding his attainder.’

* ‘Patent Rolls,’ Edward V., May 28, 1483.

† Ibid., 1 Richard III., March 5, 1484.

This information is communicated by the late reviewer's widow. The authorship of the history alluded to is not given, but the statement is probably correct, seeing that Philip Morgan was not only important and influential in affairs pertaining to the accession of Henry VII., but was also married to a daughter of Sir Rhys ap Thomas (see page 84).

Morgan's connection with the plot at this stage is, moreover, corroborated by the following abstract from 'Hall's Chronicle,' edit. 1809, p. 410 :—

'But in the meane season there came to the Earle (Richmond) a more joyfuller message from Morgan Kydwelly learned in the temporall lawe whiche declared that Ryce ap Thomas, a man of no less valyauntnes than actyuitee, and John Savage, an approved captayne woulde, with all their power be partakers of his quarell.'

This is also repeated verbatim by 'Holinshed Chronicle,' Vol. III., p. 434. (Edit. 1808) sub anno 1485.

Sir Harry [Morgan] of Kidwelly, a celebrated litterateur who flourished between 1400 and 1430 : probably Harry Morgan of Muddlescombe (see p. 84).

Ieuan Deulwyn, a Welsh bard of remarkable genius, was a native of Kidwelly, resident at Pendeulwyn within the parish. The name Dillwyn is supposed to have derived from him.* He flourished between 1450 and 1490. Although generally distinguished by his poetical effusions and attainments, he was a man of many parts, and of a highly cultured mind. By virtue of a commission of Edward IV., Aug. 12, 1460, he was one of the the 'foure cheyffest men of skylle within the provynce of Sowth Wallys,' who were cited to Pembroke Castle to decide 'the progenie and descent of the honourable name of the Herberts,' Earls of Pembroke. Having scrutinized, among other 'auncyent wrytyngs' the documents of Margam Abbey and Ystrad Fflur [Strata Florida], and many soche other Bookys and Warrantes of Awthoryty,' the commissioners made their return to the king in four languages—Latin, Welsh, French, and English.* The other commissioners were—Howell, the son of David, the son of Ievan, the son of Rhys; Howell Surdwall; Ievan Brechfa.† Ieuan Deulwyn was a bard of the chair of Glamorgan. In 1470 he was a disciple of Meredydd ap Rhosser in that chair, and in 1480 he was himself the president of the chair, and Iorwerth Fynglwyd, Lewys Morganwg, and Harri Hir, his disciples.‡ Seven of Deulwyn's poems are published in 'Gorchestion Beirdd Cymru,' pp. 127—142. 'Marwnad Syr Rhisiart Herbert, a las yn y maes ym Mambri'—'An Elegy to Sir Richard Herbert, who fell on the field of Banbury'—is one of the published poems, selections from which are here given in the original—

'Y warr gronn orau o grêd,

Ieuan Deulwyn is included by Tudur Aled in the same category with Nanmor and Dafydd ap Edmwnnt, thus :—

Sir John Yarford, Lord Mayor of London in the civic year 1519—1520, is represented in 'Mund's Chronicle' (1611) to have been a mercer, and a son of William Yarford of Kidwelly.

Ieuan Tew Ieuanc. Another eminent bard of Kidwelly who flourished from 1560 to 1590. He wrote a poem in 1590 to Dr. William Morgan, bishop of St. Asaph, who translated the Bible into the Welsh language.* This is a specimen of Ieuan 'Tew Ieuanc's verse and sentiments—

' A gair Duw yn egored aeth,

John Davies of Kidwelly translated 'A History of the Caribby Islands,' 2 vols., in 1666. In 1671 he also translated from the French 'A Treatise on Ceremonies of the vacant see, or a True Relation of what passes at Rome upon the Pope's death ; with the Proceedings in the Conclave, for the election of a new Pope ; according to the Constitutions and Ceremonials. As also the Coronation and Cavalcade.'

John Griffith, B.D., was born at Kidwelly on Jan. 9, 1772. He was the son of a Welsh yeoman, educated at the Grammar School, Carmarthen. From here he proceeded to Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he obtained a scholarship and several college prizes in each year of his residence. He graduated B.A. in 1795 First Senior Optime ; M.A. in 1798 ; B.D. in 1805, having been elected Fellow of his College. On reference to the Tripos List it will be seen that John Griffith is the only Honour man of the College in his year, Emmanuel being an easy-going fashionable College, where undergraduates were an idle set of well-to-do young gentlemen. He was appointed minor canon of Ely in 1890, became later epistler and auditor, and also bishop's surrogate for wills, as well as marriage licenses. He was preferred to the benefice of St. Mary's, Ely, which he held until 1827, when he accepted the perpetual curacy of Stuntney, which he held until his decease. He was also chaplain of the Bishop's Gaol, and sinecure rector of Fulbourne. He had sprung, as has been seen, from a comparatively humble origin, and he made the best of his opportunities. He knew the value of money, and his responsibility as trustee thereof. He dowered many connections, unknown to him, who had to be sought out from the fastnesses of the Welsh mountains and the antipodes. In his will he left £1000 to found a charity 'for two widows, or two spinsters, or a widow and a spinster, born in the borough or parish of Kidwelly; females of irreproachable character, with a preference always in their choice of such as may have seen better days, and shall have been reduced in their circumstances through unavoidable misfortune.' The trustees appointed under the will are the vicars for the time being of Kidwelly, St. Ishmael, and Llandefeilog.

Kidwelly has also given birth to the following public men :—

Thomas Job, a Calvinistic Methodist minister of Conwil, was born at Rogerlay, Kidwelly, in 1825. He was educated at a school at Carmarthen kept by a David Aaron, and afterwards became a pupil of Archdeacon Williams's school in the same town. In 1847 he went to Trevecca College, and was ordained at Carmarthen in 1855. He became Ysgrifenydd y Cyfarfod Misol in 1869, an office to which he was re-appointed in 1871. In 1873 he was elected Llywydd Cymanfa Ddirwestol Gwent a Morganwg. In 1897 he accepted the title of D.D. from Gale University, U.S.A.

William Rees, sometime curate of Ystradgynlais, received his rudimentary training at the National School, Kidwelly. From here he went to Carmarthen Grammar School, and then to Lampeter Grammar School. He graduated B.A. at St. David's College, Lampeter, in 1871, and was ordained deacon in the same year.

John Rees, vicar of Tylorstown, Glamorgan, educated at the National School, Kidwelly, and Carmarthen and Cirencester Grammar Schools. He took his certificate in Divinity at Queen's College, Birmingham, in 1871. Ordained deacon 1872, priest 1877, curate of Gelligaer 1872-8, curate of Ystradyfodwg 1879-86.

Richard Richard, Great Western Railway agent at Glasgow, received his early training at the National School, Kidwelly. He was appointed in succession G.W.R. station master at Lydney, Bridgend, and Cardiff, at which latter place he also became superintendent of the goods department.

He entered St. David's College, Lampeter, in 1884, where he gained first class (ordinary) at responses, and first class (honours) in science at moderations. He migrated to the University of Edinburgh in 1886, where in due course he obtained the diplomas M.B., C.M.

David Thomas Griffiths, vicar of Llantrisant, was educated at the Grammar School, Carmarthen, and University College, Aberystwyth. In 1888 he was elected to an exhibition of £100 per annum, tenable for 3 years at Jesus College, Oxford. He took first class at moderations in 1890 in the Honour School of Mathematics, being the first student of Jesus College who had taken this first class for ten years, only six others in the whole University having done so in this year. He graduated B.A. first class Mathematical Honours in 1892, and took his M.A. in 1895. He became curate of St. Peter's, Carmarthen, in 1893; senior Mathematical Master of Denstone College, 1897; rector of Bagendon, Glos., 1899; rector of Llandow, and vicar of Colwinstone, Glam., 1900.

Curate of Aberavon 1896—1900; St. Mary's, Reading, 1900; Headington, Oxon., 1901; and Buckhurst Hill, Essex, 1901—3.

Thomas Charles Evans, curate of Cwmllynfell, Glamorgan. Educated at the Castle School, Kidwelly, Park-y-Velvet Academy, 1884, Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, 1886. Having served two English pastorates in the Presbyterian connexion, he joined the communion of the Church of England. Ordained deacon 1900, priest 1901, by the bishop of Llandaff. He was Crawley's prizeman at his priest's examination.

William James Gravell, chaplain of St. Michael's College, Llandaff. He received his early training at the National School, Kidwelly. His education was continued at Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School, Carmarthen, in 1891, and Oswestry Grammar School, 1892—6. He entered St. David's College, Lampeter, 1896. INDUSTRIES OF KIDWELLY.

CLOTH Manufacture.—There seems little doubt that in the 14th century cloth-making and fulling was a considerable industry at Kidwelly. Among the issues of the manor accounted for by the Receiver of the Duchy of Lancaster in the year 1369—70 (see page 28), 13/4 was received for ‘the farm of the Fulling Mill,’ and a similar amount is also accounted for as rent for ‘the fulling Mill called Bordeculle.’ In the 12th century it is known that the population of the town and district of Kidwelly consisted of the French [Normans], English, and Flemings (see Appendix A), seemingly to the exclusion of the Welsh. The Flemish settlers in this country are accredited with having introduced the manufacture of worsted and woollen fabrics and the art of dyeing.* While, therefore, the Norman-French and English would constitute themselves the guardians of the district, it is probable that the industrial occupation among the community devolved on the Flemings, and that they selected the industry for which they had the greatest aptitude.

Marine Commerce.—Reference has already been made to the shipping industry of the town (see pp. 60, 61). That Kidwelly was, at an early period, of some importance as a sea-faring town there is little doubt, as the following records testify —

In 1229 permission to trade with Gascony was given by patent of Henry III. 'to Robertus de Cadewely, magister navis'—Robert of Kidwelly, ship-master.*

* ‘Hewlett’s Post Norman Britain,’ p. 15.

The commodities which appear chiefly to have constituted the early marine commerce of the town were corn and general provisions for the victualling of the garrison as shown by this record—

'Safe-conduct until Michaelmas for Eudo-la-Zusche, conveying by water, corn and other victuals by his own sailors from Bridgewater, Totnes and Dartmouth, to Pembroke, Kaermerdyn, Kedewelly, and Sweyneseye, for the support of those persons who are there on the king's expedition against Llewellyn son of Griffin, and his accomplices in rebellion, the said sailors to bring with them in going and returning, letters patent of the said Eudo as to the said victuals, and the persons to whom they are to be conveyed, and also those persons to whom they have been delivered or sold: and the said corn and victuals by no means to be converted to the support of the said rebels.'—'Pat. Rolls,' 5 Edward I., Feb., 1277.

The nature of the cargoes is stated in the following record:—

'License for John Benet and Thomas Davy, burgesses of Llanstephan, to buy 100 quarters of wheat, 100 quarters of barley and salt, 100 quarters of beans and peas, 100 quarters of malt and rye, 60 quarters of oat flour, 60 tuns of wine, ale, honey, and cider, and fish, and herrings, in England; to take the same to Kedewely and Llanstephan for the victualling and garnishing of those towns, and the king's lieges there, so that they send into chancery from time to time letters testimonial of the delivery of the same under the common seal or seals of the good men of those towns.'—'Pat. Rolls,' 6 Henry IV., Jan. 23, 1405.

The extent of the shipping industry here at the beginning of the 15th century may be gathered from this reference:—'Protection for one year for the burgesses, merchants, and mariners of Kedewelly, going to England, Aquitaine, and Ireland to trade, and for their men, ships, goods, and merchandise.*

At the time, however, when Camden published his 'Britannia' (1586), the harbour is stated to have been almost choked up with sand-banks.†

In more modern times the local shipping was again materially developed by Thomas Kymer, a gentleman who appears to have come here from Pembroke about the year 1766. This capitalist built small docks at Kidwelly, and constructed a short canal to the Gwendraeth Valley. The old minute book of the corporation already referred to, as well as the registers of the parish church, bear testimony to a revival of local shipping in the 18th century. The former records the admission to the Burgess Roll of a large proportion of mariners, while the latter contain entries of the burial of many sailors. There were at least three quays here where ships were laden and unladen. Of these one only still exists; the other two, of which there is hardly a trace left, were called the 'Ladies' (Kymer) quay,' which was adjacent to the 15th century bridge that spans Gwendraeth Fach, and 'Coney quay' on the right bank of Gwendraeth Fawr, above the Commissioner's bridge, which was built at a later date (1842). Among the minutes of the Hall Day, held in the Guildhall of the borough June 9, 1794, appears the following order in reference to the construction of the latter quay:—

* 'Pat. Rolls' 4 Henry IV. [Carmarthen], Sep. 28, 1404.

† 'Camden's Britannia,' p. 504.

‘ Upon the petition of John Bishton of Thilsall in the county of Salop, Esqr., Samuel Botham of Tong, in the same county, and Charles Phillips of the town of Llanelly, gentlemen, for a grant of a spot of ground for constructing a Quay and other buildings upon. It is ordered that the said John Bishton, Samuel Botham, and Charles Phillips have a grant of a certain spot of ground under Coney Hill in the parish of St. Mary, Kidwelly, in the tenure and occupation of John Hall, yeoman, from the river Gwendraeth Vawr 177 ft. in breadth up to the lodge of Herbert Ball, Esqr., leaving a passage of 8 ft. wide for cattle to pass and re-pass from one common to the other, for the term of 42 years : paying yearly to the corporation the sum of £2 2 0.’

Ship-building also was carried on at Kidwelly in the same period, for the records of the corporation at the end of the 18th century show that ship-wrights and carpenters were included among the qualified burgesses of the borough. Moreover, a ship-building yard is known to have stood on the site now occupied by the English Wesleyan Chapel. It is said that the last ship built here, named ‘The Sarah Jane,’ 100 ton, was a brig which belonged to a Capt. Thomas, and that when the vessel was launched, a cannon which was fired lurched and killed one man. During the French revolution a number of small traders, several of whom were from Kidwelly, sailed under convoy to different foreign ports, and were captured, together with their vessels, by the French. The above-mentioned Capt. Thomas and his son are said to have been detained as prisoners in French territory for 7 or 8 years. The following minute of the Hall Day held Aug. 3, 1781, also provides an instance of the capture by the French of a Kidwelly mariner at this time of general unrest :— ‘ John Britton of Northam, in the county of Devon, Mariner, having been admitted a burgess of this borough (Kidwelly) and sworn in on the 20th day of July, 1772, and he having this day personally appeared in this court, informed the council that he lost his certificate of being a burgess, on being lately taken by the French. It is therefore ordered that the Town Clerk do make out a new certificate for the said John Britton.’

The canal constructed by Thomas Kymer was intended to convey coal from the anthracite pits in Gwendraeth Valley to Kidwelly harbour. The canal is now disused, but a mineral railway, parallel with its bed, extends from the Gwendraeth Valley coal pits to the harbour, as well as along the canal extension to Burry Port. A large number of miners employed in these pits reside at Kidwelly, and are daily conveyed by the railway back and fore to their employment. The quantity of coal exported from Kidwelly now is insignificant, as most of it is taken to Burry Port and Swansea for shipment.

Tin-plate Manufacture.—This industry was established at Kidwelly prior to 1781, for in that year the Municipal Corporation of Kidwelly granted a renewal of the lease of the Tinmills, as appears from the following minute of the proceedings of the corporation at a Hall Day held on the ninth day of May, 1781 :— ‘ Executed a renewed Lease to Leonard Bilston Gwyn, Esq., of the Tinmills, at which time he paid the sum of five guineas into the hands of Mr. John Stephens, the Chamberlain, for such renewal.' A tablet still preserved in the wall at the end of the office of the present Tinworks bears this inscription :—' These tinworks, the oldest in the kingdom were re-built by Haselwood, Hathaway and Perkins, Anno Dom. 1801.' In one particular, however, the accuracy of this statement is called in question, as Pontypool is acknowledged to have actually been first in the field in the manufacture of tin-plates. Originally the smelting was done at the Old Forge already referred to, but the mills appear to have always stood on the site which has continuously been occupied by the concerns of successive tin-plate companies down to the present time. The above firm relinquished the proprietorship in favour of a Mr. Vaughan, who was succeeded by a Mr. Hay. The works was purchased by Henry Reed Downman, who having worked it for some years, failed, and retired to Carmarthen about the year 1845. After a period of idleness, Messrs. Ricketts and James repaired the two water-wheels with a view of re-starting the works, but their good intentions do not appear to have proceeded beyond repairing the machinery. One mill was again put into operation, and a Puddling and Balling Forge was erected by Hugh Downman, a brother of the above-mentioned Henry Reed Downman. This gentleman, in order to avoid failure, called in a partner of the name of Briggs. The old forge had now fallen into disuse. Under this firm, known as Messrs Downman and Briggs, one water-mill was kept working for several years. This company also in their turn shared the unhappy experiences of their predecessors, and went into liquidation. The works at this time was taken over by Mr. Crawshay Bailey (with whom Downman was connected by marriage), and was kept idle for several years. Mr. Jacob Chivers, who was interested in a tin-works in Spain, at length appeared on the scene, and in 1858 bought the works from Mr. Crawshay Bailey. Down to this time the machinery had been propelled by water power. Mr. Jacob Chivers was joined by Mr. Thomas Bright as a working partner, and it was under the auspices of this firm that the first steam engine was put up at Kidwelly. The old Puddling and Baling Furnaces were now augmented with a charcoal forge, with hollow fires and a helve hammer, and two mills were added to the existing one. With a view of extending the building, Mr. Jacob Chivers purchased the reversion of the lease of the property on which the works stood from the Municipal Corporation of Kidwelly. The firm now became known as that of 'Messrs. Chivers and Son.' A coke forge, with a steam hammer, was substituted for that of charcoal, and two mills were added, so that there were now altogether five mills. Mr. Jacob Chivers withdrew, and the management devolved on Mr. Thomas Chivers, his son, who constructed six new mills. In 1888 the works was purchased by the 'Gwendraeth Tin-plate Co., Ltd.' It exchanged hands again in 1899, when it was bought by the 'Kidwelly Iron, Sheet, and Tin-plate Co., Ltd.' In 1900 the old works, comprising five mills, was demolished, and the company went into voluntary liquidation in 1901. In 1904 the new works became the property of the 'Kidwelly Tin-plate Co.,

Ltd.' There are, at the present time, seven excellent mills in constant operation, which, together with the dependent departments, possess the most modern appliances. With Col. Wright as chairman, and Mr. John Thomas as managing director, it is generally agreed that the works has never been so flourishing. It affords employment to 350 hands.

Lime-kilns.—Minutes of the Corporation bear record to the establishment of lime-burning on Mynyddygarreg in the latter part of the 18th century. At a Hall Day, Sept. 19, 1785, the following order was made:—‘That a lease be granted to Walter Mansell and Edward King, of a certain part of Mynyddygarreg, for erecting a Lime-kiln, for the term of three lives, at the yearly rent of one shilling, to be paid the Chamberlain for the time being, yearly—the parties not to sell any lime.’

At another Hall Day, May 31, 1790, there is also this reference—‘A Lease is granted to Herbert Lloyd, his heirs and assigns, for the term of three lives, of a portion of Mynyddygarreg, whereon to erect a Lime-kiln.’ At later dates more extensive lime-kilns were constructed by Mr. Owen Bowen, of London, and the late Mr. Alexander Young. All the kilns have now been closed.

Silica-brick Manufacture.—The mineral wealth of Mynyddygarreg has attracted several capitalists, who, from time to time have been engaged in converting its silica stones into fire-bricks and sand. The credit of being the pioneer in this industry is given to William Edwards, of Swansea, who is said to have constructed the first local brick-works in the year 1858. He was followed by Messrs. Frederick and Jenner, who continued his business. In 1865 Messrs. Redford and Harris built a second brick-works, and were succeeded by Messrs. H. and H. E. Smart. A third was built by the late Alderman Stephens, while a fourth was erected by the late Mr. Alexander Young. The last three are still at work, and turn out a considerable quantity of bricks and prepared sand, which are consigned to large industrial centres at home and abroad.

Wherefore the said Prior prays that the things to be proved in that behalf being proved in his own name and of his priory or of his church beforesaid, the same Sir John Sandon, Thomas ap Jankyn, Philip Davy and John Davy be by you the Lord Judge aforesaid sententially and definitely condemned in ten lambs (price 3^s 4^d) five pounds weight of wool (price 15^s) and three stone of cheese (price 3^s), if they exist, otherwise in twenty four shillings of good and usual money, and also in the damages and costs and interest, and to be restored to the said prior and his church really with effect the aforesaid two parts of all the tithes, and to be reduced and reinstated to their former state, and perpetual silence to be imposed on the beforesaid Sir John, Thomas, Philip, and John and the same to be compelled to desist from molestation perturbation, and disquieting, and further to be done and established what justice shall require always saving the benefit of the law in all things.'
